In the Hochi Shimbun of the 25th instant it was stated that the sums of 150 million yen which is to be distributed as rewards to the services, would be divided as follows:—Army 90 millions; Navy 30 millions; Civil Service 10 millions. But this manner of division would give an average of 60 yen per man of the Army and 600 per head of the Naval Forces, an obviously unjust allotment. In the Asahi Shimbun of the 26th instant, however, the figures given are 123 millions for the Army, 17 millions for the Navy and 10 millions for the Civil Service.

It will be observed that these figures are difficult to reconcile. The Hochi's statement works out at 1,500,000 men for the Army and 50,000 men for the Navy. If now we apply these numbers to the Asahi's amounts, we find that the average allowance per head of the Army is 82 yen, and the average for the Navy is 266 yen, a discrepancy only a little less glaring than that noted by the Hochi. Finally, if it be true that the Army is to have an appropriation of 123 millions and the Navy 17, then it would follow the troops were only seven times as numerous as the sailors, which is obviously incredible. Very likely this method of averages is inapplicable.

His Excellency Mr. Wright, the new Ambassador of the United States to the Court of Japan, was received in audience by the Emperor on the 26th instant, when he handed in his credentials as well as a statement of the former Representative's withdrawal. Exactly the same ceremony was observed as that followed in the cases of the British and German Ambassadors. Mrs. Wright and Miss Wright were presented to the Empress, and a mid-day banquet will be given at the Palace on the 29th instant in honour of the Ambassador.

A telegram to the Jiji Shimpō from San Francisco says that at the international postal conference now sitting in Rome, it has been decided, after a vehement debate, to increase the weight of letters from half an ounce to one ounce. This proposal came from the Japanese delegate, and was warmly supported by the delegates of the United States and Great Britain. It will be a great boon to persons corresponding with foreign countries.

The restoration of the various foreign lines of the Nippon Yusen Kaisha is welcomed by the Tokyo press. These lines and the steamers to be used on them are as follows:—

The European Service by the Bingo, Kawachi, Awa, Sauki, Tamba, Inaba, Kamakura, Iyo, Kanagawa, Wakasa, Hakata and Sado.

All these vessels are of over six thousand tons. The Iyo Maru will probably be replaced by the Hitachi Maru, now building at Nagasaki.

The Australian Service by the Shinano, the Tango, the Kaga, the Aki, and the Tosa, which will be supplemented soon by the Iyo.

The Bombay service by the Colombo, the Bombay, the Ceylon, the Kagoshima, the Totomi and the Ryojun.

The Australian service by the Nikko, the Yawata and the Kumano.

All these services are fortnightly. It is further announced that the Directors of the Company have ordered six new steamers of the Tango Maru type (7463 tons). They will all be of over 8,000 tons. Four are to be built by the Mitsu Bishi firm at Nagasaki and two by the Kawasaki firm at Kobe.

Very little practical interest seems to have been excited in Japan by the news of England's project for the reduction of armaments. The only paper that discusses it editorially is the Asahi and its statements do not go beyond the common and unanswerable truism that to realize such a programme would mean the cessation of all war, a result which is quite utopian. Our contemporary evidently thinks that men must be born into a new world before they can be induced to deprive themselves of the means of asserting their rights by force. Even an agreement on the lines of maintaining present armaments as a limit seems hopeless, inasmuch as it would condemn the nations to a perpetual status quo, a state of affairs which would be very convenient for some but very uncomfortable for others. Great Britain, for example, with her colossal fleet, her alliance with Japan and her entente with France, might rest contentedly on her oars, but how would it suit Germany to abandon the programme of ship-building upon which she has set her heart and which she considers so essential to her imperial security? We should have been glad to hear from the Asahi some explicit statement of its views as to what attitude Japan would adopt towards such a policy, but at this point our contemporary lapses into obviously intentional vagueness, and limits itself to observing that although Japan might agree for the present, there would be no possibility of predicting the future. Seeing that the very essence of the understanding would be the prevention of armed development hereafter, the Asahi can not intend its analysis of Japan's views to be taken very seriously.

On the 21st instant Mr. Kawakami resumed his duties as Japanese commercial agent at Vladivostok, a post which he formerly occupied for many years in a most able manner. Simultaneously with the official announcement of the resumption of his duties, he issued a circular to his nationals, urging them to avoid all sources of dispute with the Russians. Some mutual ill feeling was inevitable, perhaps, after the war, but it should be every one's desire and rule of conduct to soften and dissipate this as far as possible. The Japanese ought to be most careful and punctilious in obeying all orders issued by the competent Russian Authorities. They must remember that martial law was still in force at Vladivostok, and that many of their nationals were imprisoned on suspicion of being spies. Great care must therefore be exercised not to enter places where vetoes were placarded and not to indulge in any demonstrative curiosity as to the movements of troops or the disposition of the defences.

It appears that retailers of salt under the system of the Government Monopoly are asking exorbitant prices from consumers. The Official Gazette contains an Instruction from the Minister of State for Finance, requiring that salt merchants shall post their prices at their doors and that the Salt Business Bureau (Enmu-kyoku) shall take measures to prevent, and if necessary to punish, any attempt to reap exorbitant profits. It is considered that no reason exists for retailers to charge high prices when they can lay in their stocks at known and moderate figures. The case of supplying remote districts belongs, of course, to a special category, but the Instruction applies to normal instances only.

It is officially announced that for the purpose of encouraging emigration to Hokkaido, large reductions of fares will be made by railways and steam-ship companies. The Hokkaido Government line and the Tanko Tetsudo Kaisha's line will grant free tickets to intending settlers, and on all other lines, whether of steamers or railways, with one or two insignificant exceptions, tickets will be cheapened by 50 per cent. This movement is connected, of course, with Saghalien. She southern part of that island having come into Japanese possession, it is felt that every effort should be made to encourage the colonization of Yezo; in other words, to push the confines of Japan proper as close to the new dominion as possible.

The annual meeting of the alumni of the Kokumin Eigakkwai (National English Language School), Tokyo, in the hall of the Imperial Educational Society last Sunday (May 27th) was held with marked success. The day was specially fixed with a view to commemorating the first anniversary of the naval battle on the Japan Sea. The addresses given by Dr. J. Inoue, Dr. K. Wadagaki, Mr. Y. Ishikawa, editor of the Mainichi Shimbun, and others naturally turned upon the Japanese Navy. Dr. Inoue's speech was of a specially significant nature. He remarked that Bushido was commonly regarded as the direct factor in bringing about such remarkable results, but for his part he thought the cause was to be sought for further than this, and was of more remote origin. He declared that the ancestor-worship which has been characteristic of the Japanese nation from time immemorial, and the fact that the nation has for its foundation the unity of families, (and not that of individuals, as is common with Western nations), have made the people what they are, that is, ready to sacrifice everything to the call of duty and to the public interest. The speaker concluded with a highly poetical comparison between the sakura blossom and the rose, the former known as the national flower of Japan and the latter as the favourite flower of Occidental peoples. He pointed out that cherry-blossoms were shown to the best advantage when they were seen in clusters. Thus the blossom might well be thought to represent the national character of the Japanese nation. The rose, on the other hand, was solitary in its nature, being better suited to the decoration of individuals thus representing the individuality which was most developed among Western nations.

On Tuesday Baron Komura was duly appointed by the Emperor to be Japanese Ambassador at the Court of St. James. The Gazette further announced that Lt. Generals Oseko, Oshima and Tachimi are raised to the rank of full General.

It is announced that national-debt-management stations are to be organized at various places throughout the Empire to promote convenience of holders of bonds. A long series of regulations is published, but the sum of the matter is that the Treasury seeks to facilitate all transactions connected with these securities.

There has been organized a new Committee called the Kowan Chosa-in, having for object to conduct investigations into bays and harbours. The precise purpose is not yet clearly stated, but that the committee is regarded as a body of much importance may be gathered from the fact that Mr. Hara, Minister of State for Home Affairs, has been appointed to preside over the Committee, and that its 16 members include several Vice-Ministers and Engineers.

The question of organizing the newly projected Bureau of Horse Management came up for discussion by the Privy Council on the 29th instant and is said to have led to a vehement debate, though we have no news as to the points which specially provoked controversy. One important modification of the Government's scheme was effected, however. The nomination of a Shiunin official to be head of the Bureau was cancelled and a Chokunin official was substituted; an alteration which may not seem cardinal at first sight, but which really signifies a great difference in the status of the Bureau. Baron Sone is understood to have been the nominal originator of the project, and it is said that Viscount Fujinami will be the first head of the Bureau.

This bureau is to be under the jurisdiction of the Home Office. Its establishment comprises 188 officials, having at their head a man of chokunin rank. The chief of the Bureau will receive a salary of 5,000 yen annually. There will be 3 stud farms, 1 farm for raising sires, and 15 farms for breeding purposes. The Bureau commences operations from June 1st.

Several of the minor Japanese journals publish, in large type, a statement that owing to the unsettled state of Siberia and the constant disturbances in European Russia, the St. Petersburg authorities find it impossible to remove the troops from northern Manchuria within the prescribed period of 18 months. There are still 200,000 men massed at Harbin and the probability is that Russia will approach Japan with a proposal to extend the time for evacuation. No authority is given for this story and we think it must be received with great caution. Eleven months of the prescribed period have still to run, and if only 200,000 troops remain at Harbin they could easily be removed in four or five months. Russia has therefore plenty of leisure still available and it is merely mischievous to publish anticipatory reports of the kind now under consideration.

The first announcement of rewards has been made. It concerns the non-commissioned officers and blue-jackets of the Navy. Thirty-seven receive the Kinshi Kunsho, with pensions of 200 yen annually; and 6,450 receive the 7th class of the Rising Sun with pensions of 100 yen annually. Nothing is yet stated about rewards to officers.

FIRES.

About 4 a.m. on Sunday, May 27th, fire broke out in a two-storied building, No. 69, Dai Homoku, near Kitagata, Yokohama. The house was burned down.

An official telegram says that at 9 a.m. on May 25th, fire occurred in the village of Togawa, Yubari, Hokkaido, destroying some four hundred houses.

An outbreak of fire occurred early on the morning of May 26th in Mayashi-cho, Honjo, Tokyo. Forty buildings were burned down.

On the morning of May 25th, fire broke out at Utsunomiya destroying forty-six houses including a hospital. Five firemen were injured.

A telegram from Aomori says that early on the morning of May 25th, fire broke out in the barracks of the commissariat, destroying official letters and ammunition. The damage is estimated at fifty thousand yen.

The Governor of Aomori prefecture reports that on the evening of May 25th, fire broke out in the district of South Tsugaru destroying forty-nine houses. Some persons were killed or injured.

On the morning of May 27th, a gas explosion occurred at the Yubari Coal Mine. Two men were killed and twenty-four were injured.

An explosion took place on May 27th at a fire works factory, in the district of Okawa, Sanuki province, destroying the building. Two persons were killed and two were injured.

The Nippon Shuzo Fire Insurance Co. in Tokyo, has wound up its affairs and transferred its business to the Nippon Fire Insurance, Osaka. On May 28th, the former held a general meeting and elected five liquidators.

On May 30th, fire broke out in the village of Aone, a well-known hot-spring place, destroying about a hundred buildings including all the hotels, police office and post office.

FOREIGN CAPITAL.

OUR readers are now acquainted with the explanation which the Jiji Shimpō has published concerning the measures taken by the Government to secure for the Industrial Bank the business of negotiating foreign loans. Additional information is now furnished by the Asahi Shimbun. We thus learn that the Authorities consulted with the Local Governors during the latter's recent assembly in Tokyo as to the best means of converting the high-interest loans of the administrative districts, the result being that instructions were conveyed to the Governors by the Local Affairs Bureau (Chiho Kyoku) in the Home Department and the Financial Affairs Bureau (Risai Kyoku) in the Finance Department, in the following sense:—

- 1.—Negotiations with regard to the import of foreign capital not having been yet completed, nothing can be certainly stated, but the Industrial Bank is investigating with a view to 7 per cent. net or lower.
- 2.—The Local Governors should send an accurate statement to the Home Department by the 10th of June at latest showing the amounts needed by the public bodies within their jurisdiction for converting old loans and for devoting to new enterprises, the two things being carefully distinguished.
- 3.—Probably the money for the above purposes will be available by the 1st of September.
- 4.—The public bodies will be at liberty to redeem these newly contracted debts at any time they please.
- 5.—The number of shares should be made as small as possible with a view to convenience in handling with respect to yearly repayments.
- 6.—The Industrial Bank does not ask that the annual average payments of interest and principal should be the same but it recommends that there should be as little difference as possible.
- 7.—Interest will be paid in the months of June and December.
- 8.—The amount estimated for the whole country does not exceed 10 million yen. Therefore when the total is fixed, it will be duly distributed.

There are other provisions but the above are the principal. It will be clearly gathered that the Government does not seek, and has not sought, to recommend the agency of the Industrial Bank except in the case of loans by administrative districts; that is to say, by cities or prefectures. There is no idea of addressing to private companies or individuals any similar advice. Neither does it appear that transactions on a very large scale are contemplated. Ten million yen is spoken of as the limit, and there is talk of distributing it among the various administrative districts in accordance with some "suitable method" of division, but we confess that this part of the subject perplexes us. The prefectural and municipal debts amount to 66 millions of yen in round numbers, but a large part of them stand at 6 per cent., a figure which could not be much improved by foreign loans, especially by the 7-per-cent. loans spoken of in the Home Minister's instructions. It may be that the amount of debts carrying a higher rate of interest is very small, and that 10 million yen would cover the whole, but such an assumption leaves no margin for new public works. Altogether this part of the subject demands further explanation, especially the statement about dividing the aggregate sum suitably. That suggests an exceedingly complicated procedure, very difficult to render acceptable to foreign investors. We are disposed to think, indeed, that what the Government contemplates is that the Industrial Bank should borrow abroad by floating its own debentures and should place the money at the disposal of the administrative districts. Otherwise we fail to perceive how various small sums required by different localities can be massed into one foreign loan. Be that as it may, however, the fact seems plain that official interference of the kind originally criticised is not in view, and that the idea is to employ the Industrial Bank for operations which would be extremely difficult without the intervention of such an institution. But there are in the Jiji Shimpō's explanation of the official attitude, one or two points calling for comment. The first is that foreign capitalists are not prepared to trust any agency other than the Industrial Bank. That is, in effect, what the Jiji Shimpō's apologist alleges. It is a great misapprehension; an apprehension the more remarkable in the face of the fact that several associations of foreign capitalists and Japanese agents have actually been organized for the purpose of investing money in Japan. The Industrial Bank has no monopoly of confidence, and the writer in the Jiji Shimpō must have seen that it has not had he taken note of existing circumstances. The second and even more palpable error is the allegation that the English subscribers of the Industrial Bank's increased capital comprise virtually all the banks and companies which take up and float foreign loans, and that any other association working in the same field would be compelled ultimately to apply to these banks and companies. This is extremely incorrect. Many of the strongest capitalists are not represented at all among the new shareholders of the Industrial Bank. We do not seek to disparage the financial competence it commands, but we do most emphatically protest against any attempt to credit it with a monopoly of such competence. There are other competing associations which have independent access to at least as large stores of capital, and this misleading claim advanced on behalf of the Bank does not help to promote its credit. We certainly do not believe that any claim of the kind is asserted with the cognisance of the Bank's able President, Mr. SOYEDA. For the rest, we are able to state on the best authority that the present Minister of Finance recognises the advantages of free competition and desires that the most advantageous offer shall win the day. Probably under these circumstances it would have been better to abstain from all issue of official instructions for introducing the Industrial Bank to the notice of potential borrowers. The commotion caused and the protests evoked by the action of the Departments of Finance and Home Affairs seem quite out of proportion to any benefits they may have conferred on the administrative districts.

THE GOVERNMENT AND FOREIGN LOANS.

SINCE we wrote editorially on this subject in our issue of the 30th instant, some further information has become available. It will be remembered that we then stated the debts of the administrative districts to be 65 millions of yen approximately, and conjectured that since the Industrial Bank proposed to deal with only a small part of them, such part represented the obligations carrying a rate of interest higher than 7 per cent. The Keizai Zasshi now states that the total debts of the administrative districts are 65,704,886 yen, and that the portion bearing less than 7 per cent. interest aggregates 45,473,178 yen, while the portion weighted with interest higher than 7 per cent. amounts to 20,231,708 yen. The announcement made to the administrative districts through the local governors contains a clause to the effect that the Industrial Bank contemplates raising foreign capital at 7 per cent., or less, and that the debts to be converted on that basis total some 10 million yen, or only one half of the high-interest sum appearing in the Keizai Zasshi's statistics which are said to have been officially compiled last November. We are thus driven to a further conjecture, namely, that only the very most expensive debts are to be converted by the Bank's assistance, inasmuch as it would obviously not be worth while to deal with any which do not carry interest appreciably higher than 7. The Keizai gives the following list of the high-interest debts distinguished according to the nature of the district:—

	Yen.
Prefectural Debts ( Fu-Ken ).....	5,075,818
District Debts ( Gun ).....	1,116,171
City Debts ( Shi ).....	5,306,322
Communal Debts ( Cho-Son ).....	6,220,587
Water-works Debts.....	2,516,810
Total .....	20,231,708

The most heavily burdened prefectures in the matter of high-interest debts are as follow:—

	Yen.
Niigata Prefecture .....	1,965,067
Osaka .....	1,628,509
Kumamoto .....	1,393,096
Tochigi .....	1,066,195

Our contemporary gives also the following table for the purpose of showing the rate at which the liabilities of local administrative bodies have increased:—

Year.	Total of Debts in yen.
1899 .....	31,858,201
1900 .....	42,734,917
1901 .....	51,240,969
1902 .....	61,110,355
1903 .....	67,111,747
1904 .....	64,992,308
1905 .....	65,704,886

The Asahi Shimbun reverts very vigorously to the question of the Government, the Industrial Bank and the administrative districts. It ridicules the assistance offered with such a flourish of trumpets through the Bank since the converted rate of interest is to be 7 per cent. or thereabouts. Our contemporary attributes to the Bank competence to arrange for the annual payments of interest and sinking fund in a manner specially convenient for the administrative districts, but inasmuch as the so-called "special" facilities indicated by our contemporary are not special at all, and could easily be afforded by any respectable syndicate, we confess ourselves unable to comprehend this part of the argument. There is, however, no ambiguity whatever about the Asahi's contention that the administrative districts may justly say "thank you for nothing" to persons who propose to convert their debts on a 7 per cent. basis. There is no better security—that of the Empire itself excepted—than the administrative districts have to offer. Railways or companies can not pledge anything more than the income accruing from their business, but an administrative district has competence to develop its revenue to any needful amount by taxation, and can hypothecate whatever portion of that revenue may be needed for the service of a debt. We entertain little doubt that money to convert the more expensive of the Japanese local obligations could be obtained in England at 6 per cent. or less, and as the Government must be fully aware of the fact, we presume that the debts which enter into the Industrial Bank's category present some special features disabling them for introduction to the notice of foreign capitalists. What that feature may be we have no conception, but this part of the subject may be commended to the Asahi's investigations.

THE BOOKSHELF.

"Masterpieces Selected from the Korin School," Vol. III., by SHUICHI TAJIMA. Published by the Shimbi Shoin, Tokyo.

THE third volume of this highly attractive series has now been published. It contains 25 plates, 7 of which are collotypes and the remainder chromoxylographs. Not only is each picture accompanied by a description, but also we have biographical sketches of the artists of the school from the pen of Mr. Tajima, the whole text being in English. The artists whose masterpieces have been taken for this volume are Kenzan, Shiko, Kagei and Sori. To most students of Japanese art Kenzan is known solely as a great keramist, his reputation as a painter being comparatively insignificant. Nor can it be said that this verdict is altogether unjust, for even by those who have devoted keen attention to his drawings these latter are valued chiefly as relics of an eminently great potter. Such as merit independent applause are few and far between, not asserting any claim to high consideration. Kenzan, though he lived during a period (1663 to 1744) when the spirit of seclusion reigned supreme in Japan, nevertheless felt the influence of the Western light that shone in through the narrow window at Deshima. Several of his drawings on paper and on pottery show distinct traces of Dutch inspiration. Only in method, however. The decorative conceptions have nothing whatever in common with any European school. They are uniquely Japanese. Not even China, at whose feet Japanese keramists had sat docilely for so many centuries, contributed the smallest element to Kenzan's decorative conceptions. Indeed it may truly be said that what the Ukiyo-e artists did for Japan in the realm of painting, Koyetsu, Koin and Kenzan did in the realms of lacquer and faience. Not until the age of these men did Japan free herself completely from alien influence.

Nomura Ninsei, who had flourished in the generation immediately prior to Kenzan, struck out a style of faience decoration which justly commanded the warm applause of all subsequent eras and stands still to-day unrivalled in its own line. But Ninsei did not break away so completely from tradition as Kenzan did. For whereas the former affected delicate work after the manner of the Kano masters, the latter adopted the bold conventions of Koyetsu and Korin, the result being that Kenzan's productions have no closer affinity with anything Chinese than have the pictures of Matahei, Harunobu or Koryusai. Thus we have two essentially Japanese schools, both belonging to the Yedo Epoch and both distinguished by their purely native conception and execution. Kenzan, so far as concerned the actual technique of his art, was not nearly so skilled as his predecessor Nomura Ninsei, nor yet as his successor Eiraku. Probably it would be truer to say that if he failed to display skill commensurate with theirs, it was not because of inferior capacity but because he recognised that a certain incongruity must be suggested if very finely manipulated pâte and glaze were associated with such a bold, vehement and severe style of decoration as he delighted in. It may be said of him, of Korin and of Koyetsu that no decorative artists of any era or any country ever succeeded so well in investing rugged virility of design with an atmosphere of the highest power. Therein lies their inimitable charm. It is brought home to us forcibly by the illustrations in this splendid volume, and from them we learn also that Kenzan was a consummate colourist, a faculty to which indeed he owes much of his decorative celebrity. The series of 13 ceramic specimens and paintings by which he is represented in this volume, concludes with a wooden tray decorated in his 81st year, that is to say, within a few months, or perhaps even weeks, of his death.

Mr. Tajima then introduces us to nine of Shiko's masterpieces. Shiko during a considerable part of his life was contemporary with Kenzan and both men studied in the Korin School, but their styles are conspicuously different. Shiko sought to combine something of the Kano delicacy with the Korin boldness, and thus his productions are at once distinguishable from those of Kenzan. He excelled in painting only: if, like so many of the artists of the 17th and 18th centuries, he devoted his brush occasionally to the decoration of faience in the raku style, tradition does not speak of it. The volume ends with two pictures from the brushes of Kagei and Sori respectively—very admirable examples of decorative painting, belonging essentially to the school of Sotatsu. We have again to express grateful admiration for the benefits that the Shimbi Shoin is conferring on the public by its excellent publications. A few years ago there were almost no avenues of access to a knowledge of Japanese art, but now, thanks mainly to the enterprise of these Tokyo publishers and to the researches of Mr. Tajima, it may almost be said that the art of Japan is receiving quite exceptional illumination. Perhaps it should be added that only one thousand copies each of these beautiful volumes are printed.

"De Becker's Japanese Law of Trading Partnerships and Companies": Yokohama, Messrs. Kelly & Walsh, Ltd.

THIS is a small book of 133 pages but it appears to deal exhaustively with the subjects of which it treats. The author explains in his preface that as the Commercial Code abounds in references, not only to its own articles but also to the Civil Code and other laws, the difficulty of acquiring an accurate working knowledge of its contents is very considerable. Therefore it has seemed desirable in Mr. de Becker's eyes to collate these inter-relations and bring their import within the compass of the handy volume which has just been published by Messrs. Kelly and Walsh. He has drawn freely on Dr. Lönholm's translations of the Commercial Code, the Civil Code and the Law of Procedure in Non-Contentious Matters, and he fully acknowledges his indebtedness to the German savant. At the close of the book there is a chapter on "The Position of Foreign Juridical Persons in Japan," and there are brief "Notes on certain Disabilities of Foreigners resident in Japan." "Brief" is a proper term to apply to these "Notes" for they occupy only a page and a half, but the number of disabilities they disclose is not inconsiderable. The author confirms a statement recently made in these columns and denied by a correspondent, namely, that foreigners can not become owners of ships flying the Japanese flag, and that, consequently, such property can not be hypothecated to foreigners as security for a loan. He also confirms a proposition asserted by us ten years ago but vehemently denied by a Kobe contemporary, namely, that superficialities is "a valuable class of holding" though "not equal to ownership." Never has a title been better abused than this unfortunate superficialities, yet we may safely assert that our own original estimate of it has been amply borne out by practical experience. This book of Mr. de Becker's can not fail to be of the greatest use to all persons having business connexions with Japan. We infer that it is his intention to publish another treatise on the laws and ordinances governing special classes of business, such as banks, trust companies and insurance companies, for these are dealt with only incidentally in the book under review. Meanwhile he has deserved well of the public by his valuable guidance to knowledge which without such aid is virtually inaccessible to the average foreigner. The treatise is also specially timely, for the commercial and industrial development of Japan has now come to possess interest for a circle of Occidentals very much wider than those previously concerned in such matters.

BASEBALL.

A baseball match between teams of the Waseda University and the U.S. battleship Wisconsin was played on the Waseda ground on Friday. The Wisconsin scored 6 runs in the first inning while Waseda made 1. In the second Wisconsin again scored one while the Waseda got nothing more till the third inning, when the home team scored 5 while the visitors were sent down every time for 0. From the third innings Waseda had Kono as pitcher. When nine innings had been played, scores on both sides were even at 7, and a tenth inning was played. In this the American team scored one run, thus winning the game by 8 to 7.

A fine game of baseball was played on Tuesday afternoon at the Recreation Ground by teams representing the American battleships Ohio and Wisconsin. The play was fast and very clever, the fielding on both sides, except perhaps in the last two innings, being most admirable. It was 5 to 5 in the latter part of the contest and Wisconsin just put on another in the tenth innings, winning a splendid game. The play was watched by many men from the ships and by quite a number of residents.

MONTHLY SUMMARY OF THE JAPANESE RELIGIOUS PRESS.

In our last Summary we epitomized from the Wasada Bungaku the opinions of five well known men on the present state of religious feeling in Japan. We now proceed to state as fully as our space allows the views of Dr. Murakami Sensei, and Mr. Ukita Kazutami, reserving the opinions of Doctors Anezaki and Matora for reproduction in our next Summary.

(6) Dr. Murakami Sensei.—I do not attach so much importance to the recent alleged revival of religion as some people seem inclined to do. But I do not deny that the movement has its favourable aspects, in that it shows a certain dissatisfaction with materialistic teaching and even with ordinary philosophy. One reason why the movement has attracted so much attention is the fact that it started in a part of Japan that has been from ancient times noted for its religious indifference. Going along the Tōkaidō, one must get to the west of Mikawa before one enters the sphere of religious earnestness. There is a vast difference between the Western and Eastern parts of Japan in the matter of religious belief and feeling. . . . But in reference to the alleged visions and revelations, there is nothing specially new about such assertions as those made by Messrs. Tsunajima and Itō Chōshin. In Buddhism we are quite accustomed to these kind of confessions (Mukashi kara yoku aru koto de, Butsu no otsuge wo hiraita (received a revelation) to ka, Butsu no kōmyō wo oganda to ka, yoku iu desu, ne!) But the religious authority attached to individual experiences of this kind can never be very great. You ask me to tell you what I think on the relation of religion to ethics. This is a subject on which I have been speaking before the University Ethical Society (丁酉倫理會) for some months. The conclusion I have reached can be stated thus in a few words. All ethical teaching has its origin in the consciousness, will and conscience of the members of communities. But religions are invariably based on the individual experiences of great men. Ethics having to do with the relations of men to each other, is naturally closely connected with the every day life of communities. The authority possessed by morality is entirely dependent on the consciousness, the will and the conscience of each individual who follows a set of moral rules. We decide on what is right and wrong in daily conduct without reference to Confucius, Christ or Shaka. But when we come to religion the situation is entirely altered. Its province is to connect man with God or Buddha and to teach what duties we owe to Divine personages. Here the authority and influence of certain great men become absolutely essential to the very existence of a creed and so we have the Christian saying, "I believe in Christ" and the Buddhist, "I believe in Shaka." If the authority of the two founders of the great creeds be denied, then the creeds will cease to exist as independent entities. That Christianity can exist without Christ as its centre and chief support or that Buddhism can exist without Shaka is not conceivable. Religion, then, rests on three props: the influence of great men over posterity, the worship they receive and the obedience they are able to command. In ethics a man's own conscience is all supreme, but in religion he has to trust to the teaching of his fellow-man. Some people think that religion and ethics are quite inseparable. In that the benefit of mankind is the object of both, in that both have a high moral ideal in view, they are certainly very closely related to each other. And the tendency in modern times has all been in the direction of giving increased prominence to the ethical elements of religion and of discouraging the ascetic, supra-mundane and transcendental elements of creeds. In reference to the religion of the future in Japan, I observe that the Rev. D. Ebina and Mr. Uemura very confidently assert that Japan will adopt Christianity. Seeing that they are both Christians, it is perhaps natural that they should take this view. But such is not my opinion. Buddhism will doubtless be reformed in various ways, as Christianity has been from time to time reformed, but the Japanese people taken as a whole are not likely to give it up in favour of Christianity. You ask whether Buddhism has not been altered by Christianity in various particulars. I would prefer to say our creed has been much influenced by the spirit of the age. Christianity has formed a part of the new civilisation but only a part. There have been many other influences at work. As regards the influence of the two creeds on each other, to me it seems that Buddhism has influenced Japanese Christianity more than Japanese Christianity has influenced Buddhism. This may be seen by an examination of the Christianity taught in this country.* You inquire whether I think there will be any union between Buddhists and Christians effected in this country. Not as regards ceremonies and outward forms. But progressive minds, whether Buddhist or Christian, are already united. The two religions have the same ends in view. Mencius says:—Maroto uia Ten no michi nari. Kore wo omou wa hito no michi nari. The hearts of those who are sincerely seeking after truth beat in harmony whatever the creed professed.

(7) Mr. Ukita Kazutami.—It is my opinion that no high class morality not based on religion can exist. The morality of Kant and Hegel was founded on religion. Our Japanese morality rests on ancestor worship; our present moral sentiments are the product of Confucianism, the Bushidō teaching and Shintoism working together.

Reverence for supra-mundane powers and spirits and intense loyalty to earthly superiors may be said to be the leading characteristics of our national morality. You ask what I think will be Japan's future religion. The creeds now taught here will, I take it, still be taught side by side. A rationalizing process is going on with them all and this will be continued more and more until religion among us will correspond to that "modern culture" advocated by Huxley and Spencer and many others. Rationalized Confucianism supplies an excellent basis for this type of religion and we Japanese may be the means of making this creed better known and appreciated throughout the Western world. In reference to the recent alleged revelations and visions, if they have served to attract attention to religion in quarters where the ordinary religious agencies produce no effect whatever, they cannot be pronounced useless. Isolated as they are, they can never form the basis of a religious creed. But as an antidote to existing conventionalism, they have a certain value. You ask whether they are not morbid. Of course the world will pronounce all such alleged experiences to be morbid, but that is because society itself is not in a sound state of health. All men would be in communion with God were they as they ought to be. The assumption made by the two or three subjects of these visions and revelations is that they have been favoured by God above their fellow-men. This is of course most objectionable. In making this assumption they place themselves on a higher pedestal than other men.

I am desirous of seeing Christianity, Buddhism and Confucianism all working harmoniously together for the benefit of society generally, and desisting from senseless recrimination and petty jealousy. The founding of a religion that shall please everybody is no easy matter. Existing creeds will serve their purpose if taught discreetly and tolerantly.

* Parturient montes nascetur ridiculus mus, which put into Japanese reads Taisan meido (鳴動) shite, nezumi ippihi wo idasu is the comment which the Gokyo makes on the big meetings of the Evangelical Alliance held in the Young Men's Christian Association Hall, Tōkyō, early in May. According to the account given of the proceedings by the Gokyo there was very serious dissension among the members over certain proposed changes in the character, the constitution and the objects of the Association. For years past there has been an under-current of dissatisfaction with the doctrinal tests which certain members of the Alliance wish to enforce stringently in all cases. They would involve the exclusion from the Alliance of Mr. Ebina Danjō and those who think with him. At the recent meeting a motion was brought forward by Mr. Ibuka to change the name of the Alliance, dropping out the word Evangelical and putting in Church in its stead. This naturally raised doctrinal questions of considerable importance and there ensued a big contest between the anti-Ebina and the pro-Ebina factions of the Alliance. The Gokyo condemns the whole management of the meeting at which this discussion took place and says that the officers of the Alliance have got a name for the clumsiness which they show in the transaction of its business. (Shoshi ga konnichi made nashi-kitaritaru ato wo mireba nani-goto wo nasu ni mo jūbun no kenkyū wo tsukusu koto naku, tsune ni fujūbun naru jūmbi wo motte tossa no aida ni koto wo nasu no hei ari.) The Gokyo gives several alleged instances of the slovenliness in management shown by the Committee of the Alliance. In the conception of Dr. Takagi, the editor of the Gokyo, nothing could have been unwise than the manner in which questions involving great doctrinal issues were sprung suddenly upon the members of the Alliance at the recent meeting. It might have been foreseen by any one that no good result would be attained by the kind of action taken at the meeting. The Gokyo goes on to say that persons who consider it their mission to be applying doctrinal tests to fellow-Christians had far better absent themselves from such meetings. Narrow-minded sectarians will do well to keep to their own narrow circles of thinkers. Let them do as the High Church party does in England, refuse to associate with other sections of Christendom. The great want of the age among Christians is amalgamation, the sinking of minor differences and active co-operation in the urgent work which has to be done. The resolution which was passed at the meeting in favour of increased union was very satisfactory, if only the right kind of men can be found to carry this project into practice.

In the Kirisutokyo Sekai we find the following comments on the meeting. Though from one point of view the meeting was more or less of a failure, it was an advance on the last General Conference, when a dead-set was made on Mr. Ebina and his party. Mr. Ebina was at the last May meeting installed as a member of an important Committee connected with the Alliance and a proposal was brought forward to modify the constitution of the Association so as to make it more comprehensive. The appointment of a Committee of 25 members representing all the chief sects connected with the Alliance to take steps for the union of Japanese Churches was a measure of great importance. Whether any good result will follow it is impossible to foretell, but we take this opportunity of stating the attitude of the Kumiai Churches to the projected movement. For years past we have mourned over the narrow-minded sectarianism of many Christians. The differences in belief among the members of every existing Church are bound to be numerous. In every denomination there are as many as to or 20 sections of Christians who differ from each other on a variety of points. We maintain that there can be no real union unless it be on our congregational principle of having no creed to which men are obliged to subscribe. We have within our ranks every sort of Christian, ranging from ultra-Calvinists to Unitarians, from free-thinking believers in what is called the new criticism of the Bible to Christians of the Plymouth Brother and the Quaker type. When we meet we agree to differ. We meet in brotherly love. We meet for the purpose of carrying out some practical enterprise in which we are all alike deeply interested. We don't find fault with each other's belief. We meet as brothers and sisters in Christ who claim liberty of belief for themselves and readily grant it to others. Now if sectarianism is to be banished from Japanese Christianity, it can only be done by a union of sects based on the principles of Japanese Congregationalism. Our Kumiai Church is a new John the Baptist heralding the appearance of a new form of Christianity in this land. We do not know what steps the Committee of the Evangelical Alliance propose taking for the consummation of the desired union, but what we say is, that any union short of perfect freedom of belief will not be worth the name. Union must be based on Christian love and not on doctrinal agreement among the members.

The importance of these utterances cannot be overestimated.* The Kumiai Churches occupy to-day the highest rank both as regards influence and numbers among Protestant sects and here we have from them a most pronounced anti-dogma and anti-creed manifesto. For years past hundreds of Christians belonging to other sects have been steadily moving towards the adoption of the fundamental principles of Japanese Congregationalism. The younger Christians are mostly of this mind. Many of the heated doctrinal disputes carried on in the West strike them as puerile, undignified and purposeless. They care not a straw which side wins in any such disputes. In their conception the Church exists not to fix on doctrines or dogmas, but to unite people together in brotherly love and to further co-operation in all manner of charitable work. They would abolish the doctrinal test system to-morrow had they the power. And it would seem as though by degrees they are getting the power. The Japanese Christianity of the future will, we predict, be more unlike Western Christianity than Japanese Buddhism is unlike Indian and Chinese Buddhism, and that is saying a great deal.

Writing on the projected union of the three Methodist Bodies working in this country the Gokyo, after nothing the fact that the Methodist meetings held at Baltimore for the purpose of considering the question of the union of Canadian and American Methodists were unsuccessful, goes on to point out that the Japanese Methodist Christians must act independently of the mother churches the other side of the Pacific. Action of this kind was, it states, taken on May 4th when at a large meeting of representatives of the three sections of Methodism held in Kanda, Tōkyō, a resolution in favour of carrying through at all costs the amalgamation of the various Methodist Churches was unanimously passed. Now that the movement has actually begun, continues the Gokyo, there is no need for any Methodist Christians to hold back any longer. Admiral Tōgō's signal to the vessels composing his fleet before the battle of the Sea of Japan, Kokoku no kōhai kono issin ni ari. Kakuin issō funrei doryoku seyo. "On this battle depends the fate of the Empire. Let every man among you put forth all his strength," is applicable to our Methodist Churches to-day. Their whole future depends on their making use of the opportunity given them to-day of rendering themselves thoroughly independent and self-supporting. Mr. T. Miyaji has been contributing to the Gokyo articles on the Methodist union entitled "Union, Independence and Self-support." The third of these articles appears in the May 19 number of the Methodist organ. This writer is of opinion that the self-support of the Churches is not a state that can be reached at a leap. The pecuniary aid now received from foreign missionary Societies must be gradually withdrawn until the churches have become wholly self-supporting. The present state of servile dependence on foreign mission Boards, he alleges, characterizes the majority of Methodist churches Mr. Miyaji condemns in very trenchant terms. He says that a Church body whose hands and feet are in Japan but whose head is in America can effect very little and he questions whether there is any object in the prolonged existence of such a church (Sonna kaishō (甲斐性) naki Kyōkai ga (such profitless churches) nagaku sonnai no kachichi wo tamotsu ya ina ya sukoburu utagawadshii de wa nai ka.)

* Since penning the above lines Dr. De Forest's very interesting address before the Alliance has appeared in these columns. He evidently appears to think that the proposed union is practicable, despite the serious doctrinal differences that exist.—(WRITER OF SUMMARY.)

We have quoted from the Congregational organ, the Kirisutokyo Seikai, and from the Methodist organ the Gokyo, comments on the important Evangelical Alliance Meetings held early in May. We now proceed to give a few of the remarks of the Fukui Shimpō, the Presbyterian organ, on the same subject. That paper after publishing a full report of the proceedings writes regretfully on the discussion which took place and the hostile feeling which displayed itself at one of the meetings held. It says that the disturbance reached a great height, that the proceedings were not such as become a Christian Assembly. Intemperate language was used and ordinary politeness was ignored. (Gijō wa Kirisuto shinto wo daihyō suru shūkwai ni arumajiki fu se sei no genron, reigi naki laidō wo motte jūrin seraretari. Jitsu ni tsūtan subeki koto nite ariki) The Christians who led the opposition movement were Messrs. Yamaji and Miyaji. Judging from the report of the meetings given by the Fukui Shimpō, the object of the new rules drawn up was the broadening of the basis of the Alliance so as to include members of heterodox opinions as fellow-workers. Those who were in favour of this seemed to have succeeded to a very considerable extent. The dropping out of the word Evangelical was agreed to. But rule 1 says that the churches to be associated under the new Alliance are to be evangelical churches (Futsū ni Fukui shugi to shōsuru Kyōkai, &c.)* But from some remarks made by the Fukui Shimpō we infer that the new organization cannot as yet be said to have taken the place of the old one. It writes thus:—"It was agreed that until the formation of the new Alliance has been completed the officers of the Evangelical Alliance should retain their posts and should be expected to assist in adjusting affairs so as to facilitate the establishment of the new Alliance." The Fukui Shimpō furthermore says that the new Alliance will to a large extent resemble the old one (daidō shō); that it will inherit all the weaknesses of the Evangelical Alliance. The Fukui Shimpō is not very sanguine as to the success of the projected new body. The total results of the meetings held by the Evangelical Alliance early in May it pronounces to be disappointing, with the one exception of the appointment of a Committee of 15 members to consider and report to the Alliance on the subject of a union of various Protestant sects for evangelistic and other purposes. This committee consists of 6 Congregationalists, 6 Methodists, 6 Presbyterians and 7 representatives of other sects. The Committee has elected the following five gentlemen as a Sub-Committee: Messrs. Honda, Kozaki, Ebina, Takagi and Uemura. To them is committed the task of drawing up rules of association for the projected Union Church of Christ in Japan. Will they succeed in agreeing as to the doctrinal basis of the new body, asks the Fukui Shimpō? They differ widely among themselves. Can they dismiss and forget past disputes and discrepancies? Much depends on their action. Is Japanese Christianity to be a mere weak imitation of Western Christian sectarianism, or is it destined to be established on a broader and nobler basis? Our Christianity began with the resolve to banish sectarianism and we, says the Fukui Shimpō, are among those who are sanguine enough to think that it can be effected. The dream that one day we should see an independent, self-supporting, non-sectarian Church in this land—a dream which some of us had 35 years ago and which we cannot possibly forget—is by no means, in our conception unrealizable. We urge our fellow Christians to carve out for themselves a new path, to set their faces against making this country the receptacle of fossilized European and American Christianity,† against merely repeating history, and we look to them to found a Church that shall in every way be abreast of the age in which we live and that shall commend itself to the deeply rooted sentiments and convictions of the Japanese nation. Whether the Committee that has been appointed can carry through an enterprise beset with so many difficulties and dangers as the abolition of sectarianism and the use of doctrinal tests we cannot say; but we hope and that pray they may succeed, concludes the Fukui Shimpō. The subject of revising the Japanese translation of the scriptures was discussed at the Evangelical Alliance Conference. The Fukui Shimpō highly disapproves of the arrangements proposed for effecting this. It wishes to see the whole thing done exclusively by Japanese. It does not see why foreign Bible Societies should have anything to do with the enterprise nor why it is necessary to have foreigners on the Translation Committee. Surely, says this organ, there is a number of Japanese scholars who are quite competent to translate the Bible into their own language. In the case of the version now in use the foreign Bible Societies practically monopolize the whole business of selling copies. The Societies, too, printed the translation made. To repeat this mistake to-day would be a crushing misfortune (Kaiyaku no seisho wo shite dotsu no ummei ni kakarashimuru wa hotondo shinobu-bekazaru fukō ni arasu ya?). That our independent and sharp-witted Japanese scholars should when translating the Bible be obliged to consult foreign translators on every occasion would render their work tediously troublesome and difficult. We are opposed to consenting to any such arrangement. It would be far better to do the whole thing ourselves without any foreign aid, concludes the Fukui Shimpō. The proposal made to the Alliance that the two Bible Societies be asked to take the lead in the preparation and publication of a new version of the scriptures seems to have originated from Dr. D. C. Greene. The objection which the Fukui Shimpō has to this plan is the fact that these Societies are supported by certain foreign Protestant sects many of which have fixed doctrinal views and creeds and that it would never answer for progressive and comparatively free-thinking non-sectarian Japanese Christians to submit to the enthralment that would be involved by the attempt to work under their control.*

✕ Of course the Christians who do not believe in the Divinity of Christ nor in miracles will assert that their Gospel is the true form of the original faith, that the pro-supernatural section of Christians is mistaken, etc.—(WRITER OF SUMMARY.)

"Japanese as Spoken by Foreign Missionaries" is the title of a note which appears in No. 567 of the Fukui Shimpō. It says that the speeches of Dr. De Forest and the Rev. H. H. Guy at the Evangelical Alliance meetings were much applauded on account of the language used by these speakers. Some of the younger missionaries receive praise for the acquaintance they showed with idiomatic colloquial, but the following word of reproach is administered to them by the Fukui Shimpō. Compared with the simple, impressive and dignified language of the veteran missionaries the "ano ne style" of speech affected by some young men and a certain levity and courting of popularity tend to disgust audiences (Keihaku ni shite jinkō-tori ni tsōgawashiku rikō (利巧) no ben, toki to shite ōto (嘔吐) wo moyōsubeki mono ari) and to make people ask whether in character young missionaries reach the standard of the old ones (Aruiwa gwaikoku senkyōshi hinkaku no geraku seshi ya wo osori: hika?).

We continue our extracts from the Raise-no-umu. It will be observed by readers that almost every noted scholar in Japan was approached by the Shin Bukkyō inquirers and most of those applied to gave some kind of answer. To us what some of them avoided saying or said in a purposely ambiguous and lazy manner is quite as significant as the very confident assertions which others make.

(19) Mr. Tsuji Shinji, for many years Vice-

* It is quite sure that the British and Foreign Bible Society would never sanction rationalistic translations of the Scriptures, so that in case the Japanese translators wished to embody the results of what is known as the "New Criticism" in their version of the Bible, this would be vetoed by the Bible Societies' Committee. Many Japanese think that the English Bible, beautiful as is its language, is quite out of date as to accuracy (WRITER OF SUMMARY).

Minister of Education and now President of the Imperial Education Society. I have at present no ideas at all on the subject of your inquiry. This I beg you to observe. This is the only answer I can give you.

(20) Mr. Tomeoka Kōsuke. I believe there is a future life. The ground for this belief with me is the teaching of Christ. As to the nature of our future existence, we have no information and no means of obtaining it. But certainly it will not be one of idleness, where, with nothing to do we shall simply eat and drink. I believe we shall have some pleasant and profitable work given us to do the performance of which will be a carrying out of Divine purposes.*

(21) Mr. Shimoda Jirō. There is no future life. (1) There is no matter separate from energy. These two exist together, and simultaneously and are inseparable from each other. (2) The body is of a complex nature, being composed of a variety of materials. The mind furnishes to this body a suitable amount of energy, enabling it to become active. Body and mind are part and parcel of each other; which is cause and which is effect it is impossible to say. (3) When the body dissolves the energy which has been associated with it assumes a new form. When the body dies the existence of mind comes to an end. The matter which has composed the body and the dissipated energy which has been associated with that matter are alone permanent. These primary elements alone are undying. All else is transient. It goes without saying that individuals like ourselves whose existence is dependent on a temporary combination of matter and energy cannot survive their separation from each other.

(22) Mr. Shiba Tekichi.—I have no ideas whatever bearing on the subject of your inquiry. But perhaps I should rather say that I can conceive of no reason for the existence of a future life. I am quite unable to place any confidence in what Christ and Shaka taught on this subject, though I recognize what an excellent model was furnished to us by the teaching and the lives of these two great men. As examples to mankind I believe in them both and strive to follow them. But I can't go beyond that.

(23) Mr. Ose Jintarō.—I beg to say in reply to your inquiries that I am quite unable to discover any grounds for supposing that there is a future life. For this simple reason I reject the notion that there is any future existence for human beings.

(24) Mr. Shimada Saburō.—Seeing that I am conscious that my intelligence is too limited to allow of my fathoming such a subject as the existence or non-existence of a future life, I am content to believe the saints and philosophers who tell us that there is a future world. Beyond that I desire to bear in mind what Licheu (李維) says: "If there be no Heaven, then there the matter ends. If there be a Heaven to it the best of men will ascend. If there be no Hell, then there the matter ends. If there be a Hell, inferior men will enter it (Tendō nakereba, yamu. Araba, kunshi noboru. Jizoku nakereba, yamu. Araba shōjin iru.)"

In a recent number of the Koye (Roman Catholic) that magazine protests against the notion that the chief object of adopting a religion is personal comfort. What is known here as the anshin ritsumei plea for accepting a religion is, according to the conception of the editor of the Koye, accorded far too much prominence by many religious teachers. While it is characteristic of all human beings to seek for comfort and peace of mind in a world that is full of trouble and perplexities, yet to accept a creed principally on the ground that it provides solace for the mind is a dangerous course to follow, says the Koye, as there are far higher considerations than personal comfort—considerations connected with truth and error, with duties and obligations towards the Creator of the world. We are under an obligation to serve God, continues the Koye, whether that service brings us comfort or whether it does not. To make religion all subjective, as some people do, is to degrade it, and to imply that its objective reality is of minor importance. This error is very common in Japan to-day. The chief object of religion is to teach men their duty to God and to their fellow-men. If by fulfilling those duties men obtain peace of mind, this is a gratifying remote result of religious teaching. But comfort apart from enlightenment, apart from a sense of duty, should not be procurable within the pale of the Christian Church. Religions are not to be gauged by this comfort test. To say that the religion which gives the most comfort is the best is to lower religion to the level of such soothing devices as nurses and mothers employ in dealing with children (Kodomo damashi aru nomi ni shite, &c.) Are truth and error considerations of no moment as long as the mind of man is soled? Is the "pious fraud" that comforts to be ranked side by side with the real truth that affords no comfort at all? Or is the former to be accorded even a higher position because of its aptitude for playing the rôle of consoler? Surely this comfort plea for religion is being pushed in this country at the present time to very illogical conclusions. If the Christian religion has no better claim for acceptance than the fact that it affords comfort to certain minds, then it follows that men whose tastes and opinions do not allow of their receiving any comfort at all from this religion are perfectly justified in ignoring its existence and in showing the most profound indifference to the propagation of its doctrines. If men could say truthfully of our Roman Catholic faith, "It is a mere device for solacing men's minds" the chief glory of our religion would have passed away.* Yet if we ourselves make no protest against the prevailing tendency in this country to weigh all creeds in solace scales, the true nature of our religion will remain unknown to an undiscerning public.

* Mr. Tomeoka's great Christian activity is known to many readers.—(WRITER OF SUMMARY).

* There is no suitable English equivalent for the term Kunshi. Legge's "Superior Man" sounds very stilted. In Chinese literature the term is used to denote chiefs, lords, princes, kings, persons occupying highly honourable positions and even fathers and mothers. But its widest meaning is a "virtuous man," an "aristocrat" in the old Greek sense of that term, the best type of man; the beau idéal of goodness. As a class the Kunshi may correctly be called the best men. It would seem from the above quotation and that which precedes it that Mr. Shimada is not at all sure that there is a future life. He considers the subject to be beyond him.—(WRITER OF SUMMARY).

BAPTIST MISSION CONFERENCE.

The annual conference of the missionaries of the American Baptist Missionary Union, and the triennial union conference of those missionaries with the missionaries of the Southern Baptist Convention, were held in Arima in May. The two conferences were organized on Wednesday, May 9th; the A.B.M.U. Conference in the morning and the Union Conference in the afternoon.

Officers of the A.B.M.U. Conference were chosen as follows:—President, Rev. T. E. Schumaker, Otaru; Vice-President, Rev. C. B. Tenny, Kyo'o; Secretary, Rev. J. H. Scott, Osaka; Statistician, Rev. S. W. Hamblen, Tokyo; Preacher, Rev. Fred Merrifield, Tokyo; Alternate, Rev. W. B. Bullen, Sendai; Ex-Com., Rev. J. H. Scott, Osaka, Rev. R. A. Thomson, Kobe, and Mrs. J. L. Dearing, Yokohama.

The officers chosen for the Union Conference were as follows:—President, Rev. S. W. Hamblen, Tokyo; Vice-

* This is an extremely interesting and important subject. We have often put to ourselves the question, "In the whole history of the world which have afforded most comfort to mankind, the world's truths or its errors and illusions, that are at the nature of errors?" Most people would perhaps reply, "Its errors and illusions." This opinion is held by eminent Buddhists in this country, who maintain that the Mai (迷) Buddhist teaching, which consists of illusion, that is doctrines that are actually erroneous, affords more comfort than the (悟) Go teaching, that is, the statement of the real truth as known to the enlightened.—(WRITER OF SUMMARY)

President, Rev. J. W. McCollum, D.D., Kumamoto. Secretary: Rev. R. A. Thomson, Kobe. These officers constitute the Committee of Arrangements for the next Conference.

The larger part of the first session of the Union Conference was taken up with a lively discussion of a paper by Prof. E. W. Clement, of Tokyo, on "The Baptist Contribution to Japanese Christianity," which was considered too liberal and revolutionary in some of its views.

The Union Conference did not meet again until Monday, May 14, when reports of committees and discussion of various matters, with appointment of new committees, finished its work.

The A.B.M.U. Conference continued its sessions on May 10th, 11th, 12th and 14th, and devoted its time to more or less valuable discussions of various matters of policy. The reports of the statistician, of the stations, of the day and boarding-schools for boys and girls, of several standing committee, brought encouragement. During the last school year, Duncan Academy (Tokyo Gakuin) received official recognition as a Semmon Gakko (Special School) with the attendant privileges of postponement of conscription and eligibility to the entrance examinations of higher institutions. The Theological Seminary in Yokohama has had an unusually good year and plans to put still greater emphasis on a special course, largely in English, for advanced students.

Strengthening and extension of the work received special alteration and emphasis by the call for extraordinary appropriations for Church buildings in Naka (Riukiu), Hyogo, Osaka, Kyoto, etc.

The one great topic before the Conference was that of a Union Theological Seminary in cooperation with the Southern Baptist Convention. This subject was discussed freely and lengthily; but a suitable plan was not agreed upon during Conference. After adjournment, however, a joint committee succeeded in formulating a plan which is agreeable to both parties on the field here, but must await ratification by the Home Boards. Just as soon as ratification is received, a joint Board of Trustees (of three from each mission) will assume management of the Seminary.

Rev. S. W. Steadman, of Chofu and Miss Mary Danielson, of Osaka, have completed the Mission course of study during the year.

As the term of office of three members of the Reference Committee (Messrs. Fisher and Scott and Miss Hughes) expired, Messrs. Thomson and Wynd and Miss Rolman were chosen in their places.

Dr. Dearing and Prof. Clement were continued as the A. B. M. U. representatives on the Standing Committee of Cooperating Missions, Dr. Bennett and Mr. Parshley as A. B. M. U. representatives on the Union Hymnal Committee; and Mr. F. G. Harrington and Miss Whitman as A. B. M. U. representatives on the Committee for Union S. S. Lesson Helps.

Rev. F. G. Harrington, of Yokohama, is working industriously on the excellent commentary on Matthew by Rev. John H. Broadus, D.D. The Japanese version will probably be published soon.

Sunday, May 13th, was, of course, specially devoted to religious services, of which there were four:—9 a.m.—Special Prayer Service, by Rev. Nathan Maynard, of Kokura; 10.30 a.m.—Sermon, by Rev. F. W. Steadman, of Chofu; 4.00 p.m.—Vesper Service, led by Rev. F. C. Briggs, of Himeji; and 8.00 p.m.—Sermon, by Rev. J. F. Ray, of Fukuoka.

Although fewer ladies from Northern Japan were in attendance than usual, the grand total of missionaries, not including visitors, was above 40. And, although too much time was spent in apparently fruitless discussion, yet in the end a great deal was accomplished, and very important steps were taken to advance the Baptist cause in Japan. C.

PUBLIC FAREWELL TO MR. AND MRS. HUNTINGTON WILSON.

A largely attended reception was held at the American Consulate-General Tuesday forenoon in honour of Mr. and Mrs. Huntington Wilson who are leaving shortly for home, where Mr. Huntington takes up the important duties of Third Assistant Secretary in the State Department. Mr. and Mrs. Wilson have made themselves so popular in Japan that no words of ours are necessary to express the regret that is felt at their departure from these shores.

Mr. and Mrs. Wilson were to have left Yokohama on Tuesday afternoon by the Siberia, but that vessel having been quarantined their departure has been postponed for ten days. The reception was held in the office of the Consul-General which was prettily decorated for the occasion with bunting and greenery, the work being carried out under the supervision of Dr. Jones. The guests were received by Mrs. Miller, Mrs. Scidmore, Mrs. D. H. Blake, Mrs. E. W. Frazar, Mrs. Merriman, Mrs. Howard, and Mrs. Horne, and by Consul-General Miller and Messrs. E. W. Frazar and D. H. Blake. Among prominent American citizens at the gathering, were Mr. Jones, the newly-appointed Consul-General at Dalny; Mr. Laughlin, of the U.S. Embassy; Mr. N. F. Smith, President of the American Asiatic Association, and all the leading American residents, including many ladies, as well as several members of other nationalities. Among those present were His Excellency Governor Sufu, Mr. Taniguchi, Secretary of the Kencho; and Mr. Hashimoto, Director of the Customs, Mr. H. W. Denison of the Foreign Office; Mr. D. W. Stevens, foreign adviser to Korea; and Mr. Van den Berch van Heemstede, of the Kencho. On the lawn the fine band of the U. S. warship Ohio played a choice selection of music during the reception.

About 11.30 the Right Rev. Bishop McKim, addressing Mr. and Mrs. Wilson, said to him had been assigned the high honour and sad pleasure of saying farewell to them in the name of the American community. For nine years Mr. and Mrs. Wilson had been amongst them, and those nine years had been the most momentous in the history of the Empire to which Mr. Wilson had been commissioned. It had been the traditional policy of their Government to avoid entangling political alliances, but the respect, sympathy and friendship which had always existed between America and Japan had been strengthened during recent years, and now bound the two nations together with a three-fold cord which could not easily be broken. Those present who had passed the fifth decade of life and faced the setting sun were unwilling as yet to step aside for their descendants. They must admit, however, that the galaxy of youth which at Tokyo had so ably represented American interests had strengthened the claims for youthful leadership. (Applause.) For six months, as Chargé d'Affaires, Mr. Wilson had met with tact and unflinching courtesy the many demands ever before him, and had won for himself the increasing respect and confidence of his countrymen. The President of the United States had not only honoured Mr. Wilson, but also American citizens in Japan, in calling him to the high office so richly deserved and for which their friend was well qualified by many years of diplomatic experience. The American community in Japan would watch Mr. Wilson's future with interest and with hearty good wishes for his success and future advancement. As for Mrs. Wilson, continued the speaker, during the short time she had been in Japan she has won the hearts of all who had enjoyed the privilege of knowing her, and never had the diplomatic circle been graced by a more charming personality. (Applause.) She had represented the highest and best type of American womanhood. A warm and gracious welcome had ever been extended to all who had crossed the threshold of her home, while the personal interest taken by her in charitable and philanthropic movements, and her quiet, unostentatious devotion to all that was good would linger gratefully in the hearts of many. Concluding his remarks, Bishop McKim said it was not easy to say "good bye." All present were indeed sorry to lose them. But in bidding "Good-bye," those present asked Mr. and Mrs. Wilson to accept as the outward and visible expression of their regard the presents in front of them as a souvenir of the friendship of those assembled. Might the gifts ever recall to the recipients Japan and the many friends who very reluctantly parted with them. In the name of all present he wished Mr. and Mrs. Wilson God speed, long life, prosperity and happiness. (Loud applause.)

On the call of Mr. N. F. Smith, three cheers and a "tiger" were heartily given for Mr. and Mrs. Wilson.

The gifts comprised a very handsome silk parasol for Mrs. Wilson, while to Mr. Wilson was presented a chaste silver bowl on a black carved stand, with silver plate attached bearing the following inscription:—"Presented to the Hon. Huntington Wilson, Chargé d'Affaires to the United States of America, by the American community of Japan, May 1906."

Mr. W. E. Lampe, of Sendai, said he had come from Sendai that morning especially to represent the American citizens of that city at the function. Dr. de Forest expected to be present to represent not only the American citizens of Sendai, but many others who had been helped in all circumstances by Mr. and Mrs. Wilson during the last few years. Dr. de Forest, however, was not able to attend that morning, and he (Mr. Lampe) had been asked to take his place and read the following testimonial of regard:—

"ARIMA, JAPAN.

"May 25th, 1906.

"TO MR. HUNTINGTON WILSON,
"Secretary, American Embassy,
"Tokyo.

"DEAR SIR,—On your return to the States the sixty members of the A. B. C. F. M.'s Mission now in session at Arima desire to express their high regard of the work you have done in Tokyo as an official of our Government and also as a representative of our great nation.

"We call to mind the fact that you are the youngest man our Government ever sent here to take so important a position as that of a Secretary of our Legation; that you have had the great responsibilities of the diplomatic affairs of the United States in Japan left in your hands four times during your nine years of service here—years of wonderful political excitement and historic interest; and that you have so wisely and ably performed the duties of your office that you are now called from the Secretaryship of our Embassy to the larger field of international politics as Third Assistant Secretary of State at Washington, D.C.

"We rejoice in your rapid advancement. We thank you most heartily for the friendly interest you and Mrs. Wilson have taken in missionaries and their work.

"We regret the loss that comes to us by your promotion, of which nevertheless we are proud.

"We also regret that none of our large body can be present at your embarkation on the 29th instant. We send you and Mrs. Wilson a simple token of our warm regards—this letter, which we believe would be widely endorsed by American missionaries all through the empire.

"Wishing Mrs. Wilson and you a restful voyage and a bright and busy future.

"We are very sincerely,

"YOUR FRIENDS,

(In behalf of the Mission.)

"J. H. PETTEE, Chairman.

"D. W. LEARNED, Secretary."

The reading of the address was received with applause, and at its conclusion Mr. Wilson, who with Mrs. Wilson evidently felt the parting with old friends, replied.

Mr. Wilson said that naturally Mrs. Wilson and himself felt overwhelmed by the honour which their compatriots had done them that day. Indeed, wherever the service might take them, he could look forward to no experience which would be so highly prized by them both as that generous expression of friendliness on the part of the American community in Japan. As to what Bishop McKim and Mr. Lampe, on behalf of the American community, said of him, that was, unfortunately, more than he had the slightest claim to, but he thought they would all pardon him if he (the speaker) did not say the same in respect to what had been so gracefully said of Mrs. Wilson. (Applause.) As for himself, whatever he had had the opportunity of doing had been but the merest discharge of his ordinary duties. It was true he had had the pleasure of living among them for many years, beginning with the old days of extraterritoriality, which in some quarters may have been looked back upon with momentary and wistful regret; but the days which had replaced the old times had fostered an extra-territoriality of Americanism and patriotism which had been combined with the best sentiments towards the country of their residence. The fact that some of their friends from Tokyo and Sendai and elsewhere had joined with those of Yokohama in giving Mrs. Wilson and himself such a hearty farewell was altogether agreeable to them; for all sections of the American community in Japan—a community of which America might justly feel proud—were represented that day. He wished also especially to thank the American Asiatic Association of Japan, and to express his admiration of the fine work that organisation was doing. It served to keep alive the American spirit, it fostered American interests, and made every American diplomat sent to Japan feel he was not left alone. In going to Washington to undertake new duties, the earnest expression of appreciation with which they had kindly honoured Mrs. Wilson and himself gave him new confidence for the work before him. In concluding, Mr. Wilson said: "We bid you all farewell. We wish you all every happiness and prosperity. Wherever we may go we shall always remember you among our friendships and cherish the reflection of the happy years which we have spent among you here." (Applause.)

The proceedings then formally terminated.

Mr. and Mrs. Wilson, we understand, will spend the time prior to the departure of the Siberia at Hayama.

THE STUDY OF MARS.

[WRITTEN FOR THE "JAPAN MAIL"]

The many friends in Japan of Mr. Percival Lowell, who, by the way, is now non-resident professor of astronomy of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, Boston, will be glad to learn of the remarkable photographs of the planet Mars which have been taken by Mr. C. O. Lampland at the Lowell Observatory, Flagstaff, Arizona. The observatory was built and equipped several years ago by Professor Lowell, who selected one of the loneliest, most desolate places in the world for his purpose, because of the singularly dry, clear atmosphere which usually exists there; that which most of the people who live in his neighbourhood loudly inveigh against, "cuss" to use the local dialect, the absence of rain or moisture of any kind, being just what Mr. Lowell was seeking, having in mind the utmost possibilities of his pet science, rather than personal comfort or public accessibility. The photographs that have been recently taken, are claimed to be the first really successful series ever secured of the so-called "Martian Canals." Favoured by atmospheric conditions, the willingness of Messrs. Lowell and Lampland to submit to the discomforts and isolation of life near Flagstaff for a long time, must have been severely tried, because, even at that place, the moments when atmospheric conditions are entirely favourable for stellar photography must be few and far between; while the process is so well-known to be such a difficult one that out of several hundred negatives, perhaps not more than half-a-dozen will be really good. It is just twenty-eight years since Schiaparelli, the great Italian astronomer, discovered about one hundred and twenty faint lines on the surface of Mars, which he called "canali" or canals. He thought they were fissures in the surface or that they might probably be the channels of dried-up rivers: very likely phenomena similar to what are seen on the Moon. Schiaparelli's hypothesis was greeted with derision by other astronomers, because they were unable to detect the lines, but he went on from discovery to discovery till at last Perrotin, at Nice, gave the first confirmation to Schiaparelli's observations. Since then the list of those astronomers who have remarked the same appearance of apparently orderly lines on the surface of the planet, has greatly increased, until now the fact of there being such lines is generally accepted: theories to explain them being still numerous and conflicting.

Professor Lowell is making the necessary preparation to give to the public full details of the observations made by himself and his collaborators at Flagstaff, and to publish his theories and deductions from them, with illustrations furnished by their photographs. But some information of an entirely popular character has been given in anticipation of Professor Lowell's scientific lectures, and perhaps a synopsis of that foreword will be interesting to general readers, although we premise by saying that we are not entirely prepared to concur with the statement that these photographs "prove the presence of life" (as we know the term in our vocabulary) on the planet Mars. Schiaparelli observed the canals running through certain light patches, which he believed to be land, but could not detect them in certain other dark fields which he conceived to be water. It is now claimed that those dark patches are not water but vegetation, by the observers at Flagstaff, for the canals have been seen to run continuously through light and dark patches alike: all are land; some is land under cultivation, the dark; the rest is barren land.

The canals are observed to start, so it is said, at the polar caps, or circles of eternal snow and ice, and to run for thousands of miles to the equator. Cross canals intersect them at somewhat regular intervals, and in the Martian spring time, when the snow somewhat melts at the polar caps, they apparently fill with water and the banks take on the greenish tinge of vegetation. As is natural under these artificial conditions, the wave of vernal change sweeps from the poles towards the equator, the very opposite of what would happen under normal conditions upon the Earth. As the Martian winter approaches, the colouring along the banks of the canals fades, even the so-called permanent dark patches (which will be explained more fully a little later) turn lighter in shade, as if the vegetation were dying; and the general appearance is the same as the earth would present if viewed from a great distance at our same season of year. There is no natural explanation that will account for the phenomenon of these canals, and the only reasonable solution, it is maintained by Professor Lowell and many others, is that they are the effort of an intelligent and highly civilized life to sustain its existence on a planet whose surface is an arid desert. For Mars has no permanent bodies of surface water. Like the moon, whatever Mars may have had of oceans, and rivers ages ago, the water either sank into the interior or evaporated and was lost in interplanetary space. This fact of there being no permanent surface water is proved by the spectroscopic. That Mars has an atmosphere is established by two facts: first, there is a perceptible twilight along the terminator, or edge of the planet turning into or out of the sunlight; second, it is a scientific fact that no change of any kind could take place on the surface, if there were not an atmosphere, and that changes in the aspect of the planet do take place with a regularity that clearly indicates something that distinctly resembles our seasons, is acknowledged by all astronomers, we believe.

Rather an effective simile has been drawn by likening Mars to a sinking ship, able to remain afloat only so long as the crew work desperately at the pumps: the pumps being, in the case of these canals, assuming them to be canals: and it is even alleged that, had they not been revealed to us by the telescope, their presence might well have been predicated by any scientist who believed the planet to be inhabited and who had closely studied its conditions. It is now maintained, that, since the camera, with its indisputable proof, has confirmed the existence of the canals, those egoists who believe the insignificant planet on which they live to be the only inhabited body in infinite space, have but one argument left, namely that the conditions are illogical and the canals are nothing but a natural phenomenon. "Anyone who has seen them through a telescope under proper conditions, would as soon think of saying a modern skyscraper was the work of nature as of pronouncing these marvellous phenomena anything else than the work of some intelligent life."

The canals run for thousands of miles over the surface of Mars; the longitudinal ones in every case seeking the most direct route from the polar caps to the dark patches. If lines were drawn by the haphazard of natural convulsion, the arithmetical chances that more than two would cross at any given point, would be one in infinity; yet that is exactly what happens with the canals of Mars. Like railways converging towards a central station, they are constantly meeting, three or four at a time, forming a junction. At these places, there are seen round spots, exactly like a city. When the canals take on the greenish tinge in the Martian spring time, the spots follow suit. "Apparently, they are the half-way stations of the irrigation system, possibly for the power plants and pumping stations." Reasoning from the assumed premiss, that these canals really are the work of an intelligence which must be called human in the absence of any other accepted terminology: it would seem that if life does exist upon Mars. It is probably much more highly developed than that on Earth, because the former planet is so much older than the latter. Consequently evolution may justly be assumed to have reached a far higher plane. The mathematical precision with which the canals have been planned and constructed, indicates the work of a mind far above what we reckon as common; and from one hypothesis we are naturally led to wider speculation: the scheme of the canals may mean that the order and direction are with a view to letting the rotation of the planet and the tidal influences of other bodies help in no small degree in accelerating the work of irrigation. Further, since the system is so complete, apparently covering the whole surface of the planet, it argues a central form of government so perfect that nothing in the wildest imagination of man (save some of the visions of Genghis Khan and others at which we laugh in derision) ever approached it. Wars and rumours of wars, diplomacy and politics, must be totally unknown—at any rate have passed into a state of innocuous desuetude, for the canals appear distinctly to be the result of an ideal co-operation for the common good. "So, instead of being the Planet of War, Mars should be rechristened the Planet of Peace."

Yet, since by reason of its lesser volume and mass, gravity on Mars would be about one-third of that force on the Earth, and probably from the assistance given by a rarified atmosphere, physical effort, in terms of our recognized standards, would be fifty times as effective on Mars as on the Earth, and a "man" there would be able to do the work of two terrestrial horses. In this view of the case, it is not beyond the power of our intelligence to grasp the possibility of such a titanic task on a field which presents so much less of physical obstacle than our Earth. It is probably in the far distant future that regular communication will be established between ourselves and the Martians; but if it ever does come about, the evidence of peaceful conditions on our neighbour should diminish the fear of disaster that H. J. Wells' novel tended to create.

PRESENTATION TO MR. H. S. PLAYFAIR.

Mr. H. Sanderson Playfair, Branch Manager for Japan of the Commercial Union Assurance, was presented on Thursday afternoon with a handsome testimonial of respect and esteem. The presentation took place at the offices of the company and was in the form of an address, signed by all the agents of the company in Japan, contained in a silver casket in the form of a section of bamboo.

Mr. W. F. Mitchell, of Messrs. Samuel Samuel & Co., made the presentation on behalf of the agents in a few suitable words, concluding by reading the address, which is as follows:—

"To Hugh Sanderson Playfair, Esq., Branch Manager of Commercial Union Assurance Co., Ltd., Yokohama, Japan Sir,—On the eve of your departure for home on furlough we feel that we cannot allow this occasion to pass without expressing in the warmest manner our cordial appreciation of the valuable services you have rendered to the company you represent, its agents in this country, and to insurance interests generally during the period of your residence in Japan."

"We wish to place on record that we consider it entirely due to your energy and capable management that the successful establishment of the Japan Branch of the Commercial Union Assurance Company, the pioneer enterprise of its kind in this country, has in the short space of five years been placed upon so firm a basis that it now occupies the premier position among foreign fire insurance companies operating in Japan. At the same time you have won for yourself the regard and esteem of all those working with you."

"We wish yourself and family a pleasant voyage, prosperity in the future and the best of health, and with assurances of the pleasure your presence has afforded us, our regret at your departure, and sincere wishes for your speedy return, we are, Sir, etc. etc."

The address was signed by Messrs. Browne & Co., Kobe; Mr. Copmann, Echigo; Messrs. Berigny & Co., Kobe; Messrs. Samuel Samuel & Co., Taipei, Formosa; Semenoff & Co., Hakodate; Messrs. Samuel Samuel & Co., Yokohama; Messrs. Isaacs & Co., Fukagawa; and Messrs. Okura & Co., Tokyo.

Mr. Playfair, in thanking Mr. Mitchell and the agents for the handsome address, said it came to him as a great surprise, more especially when he considered that the time he had spent in Japan had been comparatively short. He therefore doubly appreciated the gift which they had so kindly presented to him. He had also to thank them for the kind expressions contained in the testimonial, coming as they did from firms and gentlemen who represented the Commercial Union Assurance Association in Japan and Formosa and who thoroughly realised the difficulties which had to be overcome in the establishment of the branch. He had to thank them on behalf of the company he represented, for their very kind assistance and co-operation, without which, he felt sure, they would have experienced considerable difficulty in making the branch a success. He had also to thank them, on behalf of his wife and daughter, for the kind wishes so nicely engrossed on the testimonial, and he hoped on his return to Japan, the same good fellowship which had always existed in the past would be continued.

"Hearts were then drunk and best wishes expressed."

PLAGUE.

A case of plague was reported on May 26th in the village of Numano, Idzunami, Osaka. In the district, dead and living rats infected with plague are being found.

Another case was reported on May 25th in Fukiai, Kobe.

An official telegram says that a case has appeared in Toyoura, Yamaguchi prefecture, the patient being an old woman.

A case of bubonic plague is reported at Shimonoseki.

A case of suspected plague is reported among the Chinese firemen on the Siberia, which arrived at Yokohama on the morning of Monday, May 28th, from Hongkong. The same evening, the steamer was removed to quarantine and ordered to stay there for ten days.

The Siberia, which was sent to Nagahama on May 28th on account of the appearance of a case of plague, carried 408 passengers including 85 in the cabin. The crew number 282 in all.

The delay in the departure of the Siberia allows Sir Ernest Satow to revisit Nikko and Karuizawa; the German Ambassador also takes a run out to Karuizawa, and Mr. and Mrs. Huntington Wilson will spend a few more days in lovely Hayama.

Two living rats infected with plague were found on May 22nd in Daiku-cho, Fukugawa, Tokyo.

According to official telegrams, three cases of plague were reported on May 27th and 28th in Kobe, and another on May 25th at Shimonoseki.

New cases of plague were reported on May 29th: one each in Kobe, Shimonosaki, and Hiroshima.

Two new cases of plague was reported on May 30th at Shimonoseki.

THE ASIATIC SOCIETY OF JAPAN.

X A general meeting of the Asiatic Society of Japan was held at the British Embassy on Wednesday, May 23rd, at four o'clock. The Vice-President for Tokyo, Professor A. Lloyd, in opening the meeting, announced the regret of the President, H. E. Sir Claude MacDonald, at being unavoidably absent. The minutes of the last meeting, which had been held in Yokohama, were read and approved. There being no other business before the meeting, the Chairman at once introduced Mr. A. M. Tracey Woodward, who read his paper on Japanese Postage Stamps.

The author in a few prefatory remarks mentioned that Japanese literature on philately is practically nil; the only work coming under his notice is the "Dai Nihon Teikoku Yubin Kitte Enkakushi," a pamphlet issued by the Printing Bureau of the Department of Communications during March, 1896. This he consulted for official dates and other data. The paper then continued as follows:

The transmission of despatches by couriers in Japan may be said to have begun in the Middle Ages. Only despatches of the Shogunate were thus forwarded, however, and it was not until early in the sixteenth century that communications between private individuals were considered so important as to necessitate the establishment of reliable postal guilds in the principal towns of the Empire. These were mostly in the hands of private agencies known as Hikyaku-ya, whose means of carriage were generally confined to couriers. Later, provincial and urban postal institutions sprang up, but naturally they possessed many defects. It was to do away with these disadvantages that the Government formally opened on the 1st of March, 1871, a letter post service between Tokyo, Yokohama, Kyoto and Osaka. The system was modelled upon those that at the time were in vogue in America and Europe, and the first set of four postage stamps was issued on the day the new scheme went into operation, whilst postal regulations were promulgated, and the provincial authorities entrusted with the superintendence of the business connected with the new service.

Previous to these innovations, the Civil Government had laid before the Central Government a proposition recorded in the Dai Nihon Teikoku Yubin Kitte Enkakushi as follows: "The public recognize the great importance of the establishment of a regular postal system in this country. Up to the present time messages and letters are still entrusted to private messengers or carriers and heavy fees are charged for them. This causes the public to regret the want of arrangements for facilitating the means of communication. If, at the present time, the Government would organize a postal system and thus facilitate communications both for the public and for private individuals, it would be greatly conducive to the public benefit."

Early in 1872 the newly instituted postal route was extended to Kobe, Nagasaki, Niigata and Hakodate. Very soon the necessity of providing means of communication with foreign lands arising from the growing tendency of international intercourse, led the Government (at the instance of H. E. Mitsu Mayeshima, the then General Postmaster, who had visited England to study the postal system) to perfect arrangements with the United States of America, British and French postal agencies that then existed at Yokohama, Kobe and Nagasaki for the transmission of foreign mails in foreign bottoms. This convention came into force in March, 1872. During the following year, however, the Government sent Mr. S. M. Bryan, then in the service of the Japanese Post Office Department, over to the United States of America, to conclude arrangements for the direct exchange of mails. This resulted in the signing of a Postal Convention between the two countries which became effective on the 1st of January, 1875, on which date the United States of America withdrew its Postal agencies in Japan.

During 1876 H. E. Shuzo Aoki, at the time Japanese Minister to the Court of Germany, urged the Imperial Government to become a party to the General Postal Union Convention. The recommendation was favourably considered and acted upon, Japan being formally admitted into the General Postal Union (now l'Union Postale Universelle) on June 20th, 1877.

Excellent progress in the service was made, which obtained confidence abroad, with the consequent discontinuance of the postal agencies of Great Britain on December 31st, 1880, and those of France three months later. To Viscount Nomura who visited Germany to study the postal system, great credit is due for the many improvements inaugurated in the Japanese service, while the late Signor Chiossone, when Adviser to the Printing Bureau, designed the greater part of the stamps of Japan.

Those few words of description on the development of the Postal service in Japan will be sufficient for my purpose, and I will abstain from giving statistics bearing on the mail matter handled by the Post Office. Suffice it to say that this institution to-day shows satisfactory progress, its ramifications extending to the most remote districts.

Entering into the real subject of the work, all the existing postage stamps of Japan were described in minute detail of shades, papers, perforations and designs, revealing 812 varieties in existence. It was on the 2nd of June, 1870, that the decision to issue postage stamps was first adopted. This was consequent upon the petition made by the civil to the Central Government, but it was not until the 1st of March, 1871, that the actual issue of Japanese stamps was made; it consisted of four values. The design is native, two outlined dragons being circumscribed within a Greek border; the value in Japanese characters is placed in the centre between the dragons and reads Zeni Hyaku Mon, Zeni ni hyaku Mon etc. these characters were printed separately in black type. The stamps were engraved in taille douce on Japanese hand-made wove or laid paper in sheets of 40 stamps, printed in five horizontal rows of eight stamps each, all differing more or less one from the other in various details; they are unperforated, ungummed, and square, the average size being  $19\frac{3}{4} \times 19\frac{3}{4}$  m/m. Two plates of the lowest denomination are known to exist, and one plate each of the higher values. During February, 1873, the issue was countermanded, and on November 30th, 1889, their use through the mails was prohibited. The papers in this series are thin yellowish wove hand-made paper; thin yellowish, close vertically laid native hand-made paper, greatly resembling the quadrille paper, and the thin yellowish, wide vertically laid, slightly varying in thickness; the set of stamps was composed of the 47 mon, 100 mon, 200 mon and 500 mon. When the decimal system of currency was introduced in 1872, it was decided on January 18th of that year, that a corresponding alteration should be made in the value of stamps; the 48 mon becoming  $\frac{1}{2}$  sen, the 100 mon 1 sen, 200 mon 2 sen and 500 mon 5 sen. These four new varieties were issued during February, 1872, but the  $\frac{1}{2}$  sen was stopped on September 1st of the same year, the 1 and 2 sen on 20th July, 1872, and 5 sen on 31st May, 1873, when, on these respective dates, new stamps were substituted for the three lowest denominations only; their validity to prepay postage was cancelled on the 30th of November, 1899. The design is practically identical with the preceding issue, the black characters denoting the value in the centre of the stamps, only being altered to ni sen, go sen, etc.; antique numerals are used in the 1 and 2 sen in contradistinction to the previous issue, very likely to prevent forgery. Messrs H. Collin and H. L. Calman declare that there are six plates of this issue in existence, two for each of the lower values, and one for each of the higher ones, whilst Mr. Moens says that there was a third plate engraved for the half sen; it is generally recognized that the old plates of the 48 mon and 100 mon were utilized for one of the half sen and 1 sen, but Mr. Moens, however, mentions having seen only the plate of the 100 mon so used. Similarly with the previous issue, each sheet is composed of 40 stamps in five horizontal rows of eight stamps each, varying in details one from the other, as they were separately engraved. The stamps are square, of the same size as the March 1871 issue, and are with and without gum, and perforated.

There are two "Government counterfeits" in this series, the 1 sen and 2 sen; they were printed in March 1896 to serve to illustrate these stamps in the "Dai Nihon Teikoku Yubin Kitte Enkakushi."

They are finer productions than those off the original plates and easily distinguishable, modern engraving conspicuously predominating. The paper is wove and perfectly white, whilst the colour of the 1 sen is pale gray blue, and the 2 sen of a pale vermillion shade approximating to orange; they are ungummed and unperforated. Only about 50 copies of each are believed to exist.

The paper then went on to describe all the subsequent issues up to the set of two stamps issued on 30th April last in commemoration of the Grand Military Review.

During 1874, stamps were issued with an additional small character taken from the Katakana syllabary; these marks are generally known in Europe and America as syllabic characters, and they correspond to what philatelists term plate numbers, somewhat similar to the system adopted by Great Britain on her early issues. The purpose of changing the letters after a certain number of impressions had been taken, was to facilitate the control of checking the number of stamps issued, and in the case of Japanese postage stamps, after 10,000 with one character had been printed, the plate then underwent a change by the substitution of a different character. The "Dai Nihon Teikoku Yubin Kitte Enkakushi" states that the adoption of the Katakana syllabary on stamps began on September 12th 1874, in consequence of Notification No. 96 issued on the same day by the Home Department. Whilst this statement is official, it is open to doubt if the introduction of this control system did not anticipate Notification No. 96, for we learn from the same official source that the 6 sen stamp was issued on January 1st 1874, and yet this stamp has not been issued without the syllabic character, which is placed a little below the buckle of the garter; it is difficult to reconcile this statement with the one declaring that the adoption of the Katakana syllabary on stamps was made on September 12th, 1874.

Of rare Japanese stamps, the paper referred to the issue of September 1st, 1872.

Of all the stamps of Japan, this 20 sen lilac on laid paper is undoubtedly the rarest; I have only known of four copies to exist, and have seen only one. Fifteen years ago, a collector who had long resided at Osaka, sold the only copy he ever obtained to a collector in London for 25 guineas, but this was certainly, even at that time, far below its real market value. It is extremely probable that when printing, one sheet of the thin horizontally laid native paper intended for the use of the half and ten sen, was erroneously allowed to slip in among the thin wove native paper, this sheet being eventually sent out in the usual course of distribution of stamps; no unused copies are known to exist. Assuming my theory to be correct, it will thus be observed that originally only forty stamps were printed and if one were to take into consideration the destruction of old correspondence, coupled with the fact that the Japanese people have taken little interest in stamp collecting, especially during the seventies, so as to be actuated with the desire of preserving old stamps, it can be fairly estimated that probably not more than half-a-dozen copies are in existence to-day, attributing a value of yen 1500 to this stamp. Of errors in the designing of Japanese postage stamps, the paper referring also to the issue of September 1st, 1872, mentions that there is another variety in this series which deserves special mention, it is the half sen bistre. In one of the four plates the 23rd stamp was erroneously left incomplete during the process of engraving; on the left hand border the two slanting strokes at the top of the Japanese character "han" of han sen are absent, this makes the reading ki sen on one side and han sen on the other. This peculiarity has led native dealers to give it the appellation of "ki sen." Various authorities agree that it exists on both thin wove and laid paper, but I have seen it on thick wove paper as well.

Forgeries of the 6 sen orange issued on February 4th 1875 have been found officially obliterated, postmarks show that these imitations got into circulation during 1876. It is apparent that these forgeries were not intended for sale to collectors, but were made to defraud the Government, whose officials probably not being well versed with the rules or the stamps themselves thirty years ago, did not discover that the letters were franked with forged stamps. Six sen in those days probably meant much to the counterfeiters, as the purchasing value was more than double what it is to-day, and the standard of living very much below that of our time.

During March, 1875, a proposition was made by the General Post Office to illustrate postage stamps with the effigies of Japanese loyalists, but this suggestion did not meet with the approval of the then Prime Minister, and the matter was dropped. Notification No. 104 of the Home Department announced that from June 11th, 1875, the practice of printing syllabic characters upon postage stamps would be discontinued on account of the adoption of the process of electrotyping, in substitution for the taille douce methods of engraving. The printing of the three new stamps issued subsequent to this date, however, was not effected by the electrotype process.

The two sen drab issued on the 17th May 1879 is the only Japanese postage stamp that has been perforated in the most number of combinations, these running as high as 26, whilst the longest life thus far attained by any Japanese postage stamp is the 5 rin issued on May 17th, 1876, and withdrawn from circulation on April 1st, 1899, thus making a period of twenty-three years that this stamp was in constant use.

In commemorative stamps Japan is well represented. The first set consisting of 2 and 5 sen stamps was issued on March 2nd, 1894, in celebration of the silver wedding of their Imperial reigning Majesties. They are elaborate specimens; the centre of the stamps is occupied by a large kiku crest encircled by a ring, in the rim of which appear in the upper section the inscription "Dai Kon Niju gon sen shikuten" in Japanese archaic characters, and in the lower portion "Imperial wedding 25 anniversary"; the outer edge of the ring is formed of seventy two dots; at each side there is a fabulous bird, probably intended for a stork. At the top of the stamp "Dai Nihon Teikoku Yubin" in native characters is shown within a scroll; the value, both in the vernacular and Roman letters, is placed at the bottom together with "Imperial Japanese Post." Other parts of the stamp are elaborated with ornamental work. Printed on ordinary foreign white wove paper, each sheet is composed of fifty stamps in ten horizontal rows of five stamps each. 14,300,000 of the 2 sen and 700,000 of the 5 sen were issued. The second set made its appearance on the 1st of August 1896, and although two values were issued, this series consists of four stamps; there are two 2 sen and likewise two 5 sen, each pair bearing the effigy of Prince Arisugawa and Prince Kitashirakawa respectively. Five millions each of the 2 sen and two millions each of the 5 sen were issued. The third emission of a commemorative stamp took place on 10th May, 1900, on the occasion of the wedding of the Crown Prince and consisted of a 3 sen pale carmine stamp; thirty millions were made. The fourth issue, made on July 1st, 1905, was also a 3 sen stamp and served to commemorate the amalgamation of the Postal and Telegraphic services of Korea with those of Japan; only one million five hundred thousand were issued. The fifth series is that recently issued on the occasion of the Grand Military Review held in Tokyo on the 30th of April last; the set consists of 1½ sen ultramarine and 3 sen carmine red stamps. The paper concluded:—

In recent times the perforation appears evenly made, but in most of the early issues it is of rare occurrence that a perfectly perforated stamp can be obtained; they are generally in an execrable state, more especially the impressions on native paper, doubtless due to the fact that these papers are not easily pierced by perforating machines.

Japanese postage stamps have not yet been watermarked.

The control of postage stamps has been confided to various Departments during certain periods. Thus we find that originally the Finance Department had the care of stamps, it was then transferred to the Home Department, and in turn to the Agricultural Department, whose control was, however, of short duration. The Department of Communications ultimately took over the control, and at present efficiently manages all postal affairs.

It is not generally known that the Government has in stock a large quantity of "remainders," doubtless representing a considerable face value. Of what stamps these consist, however, I have not been able to ascertain, aside from the fact that a large portion consists of issues during the seventies. A movement was recently set on foot by a syndicate of European stamp dealers to buy up all these "remainders," but whether these efforts have been crowned with success is not yet apparent.

Frequent mention has been made in these pages of departmental ordinances governing the issue of stamps. This document, a copy of which is circulated to all the large post offices, has a specimen of the newly issued stamp attached to it. In the early issues the adhesive was cancelled by having a black dot stencilled somewhere about its centre, but in the later issues the characters Mihon, corresponding to our word "specimen" was printed over its face.

After the lecture, the Chairman said he felt sure of expressing the sense of the meeting when he extended thanks to Mr. Woodward for his extremely interesting, laborious and painstaking paper. He then invited remarks from members. In reply to a question from Mr. Gubbins, the lecturer explained that the term "archaic" is used to designate the earliest, while the term "antique" applies to later types of stamps. Mr. Gubbins then called attention to a slight inaccuracy in the paper. The author spoke of two Imperial Princes serving in Formosa, whereas only Prince Kitashirakawa served there while Prince Arisugawa served only in Manchuria. The author with thanks acknowledged the correction. Mr. Gubbins then said he wished to add his appreciation to that expressed by the Chairman for the excellent and accurate, terse descriptions of stamps—a thing which all must realize to be very difficult. In reply to a question of Professor Clement, the lecturer explained that philatelists have not set a relatively high value on the technique of Japanese postage stamps. The Chairman, again thanking the author for his paper, declared the meeting adjourned. The refreshments served towards the end of the lecture and the hospitality of the British Ambassador and Lady MacDonald in entertaining the Society were much appreciated by those present.

MEMORIAL DAY.

The celebration of the American Memorial Day was observed in Yokohama on Wednesday, the 30th May, with more than usual impressiveness than usual, owing, no doubt, to the presence of a considerable fleet of American vessels of war in the port, and partly to the fact that the exercises were under the presidency of His Excellency the new American Ambassador to this country, Mr. Luke E. Wright. The service was held in the pretty grounds of the American Naval Hospital on the Bluff, in which a marquee, dressed with the national flag, had been erected for the speakers, and seats provided on the lawn for the accommodation of the large assemblage of ladies and gentlemen of the community and officers and men of the fleet who were present on the occasion. These included Governor Sufu, Mr. Miller, U.S. Consul General, Mr. Scidmore, of the Consulate-General, Admiral Train, of the U.S. Pacific Squadron, Dr. Percy, in charge of the U.S. Naval Hospital and his assistant, Dr. Pleadwell. Mr. N. F. Smith, President of the American Asiatic Association, Rev. H. Loomis, and Rev. A. Bennett, D.D., and Miss Wright were also present. At 2.30 p.m. the order of exercises commenced with the performance by the fine band of the flagship Ohio of the national air, "The Star-spangled Banner," which was followed by the National Hymn, "My Country 'tis of thee," sung by the audience to the accompaniment of the Band, the words of which, as well as those of the hymn which was sung later on, were printed in the programme distributed to those present. After the proper passages from the Scriptures for the service for the dead had been read by the Rev. H. Loomis, and an appropriate Dirge played by the band, Mr. Wright, the new Ambassador, delivered a short but impressive oration on the subject of the ceremony they were celebrating. After a brief allusion to the historical associations of the day and the reasons for setting it apart for a service in honour of men who had fallen in the service of their country, His Excellency said that in honouring those memories those present did not necessarily attempt to deity war. All men—certainly those who had seen the horrible side of war—could but appreciate its horrors and wish that the era of universal peace might for ever prevail. But unfortunately wars had prevailed in the past, and he feared would continue to prevail after those present had gone. The arbitrament of war, the wager of battle, the shaking of the iron dice, seemed to have been a part of the history of mankind; and yet it might, he thought, be said with a reasonable degree of truth that never, perhaps, in the history at least of their own country, had there been a stronger trend in the direction of peace and in favour of settling every controversy which by any possibility might arise between their own country and other nations through arbitration rather than merely by decision of brute force. It might not be amiss for him to recall the fact as evidence of this, that very recently their President, representing as he did the intelligent thought of the American people, was happily enabled to be the instrument of bringing about, through his good offices, negotiations which resulted in peace between two of the Great Powers who then were unhappily at war—who were engaged in a war the greatest, perhaps, of modern times, and which shook the very world itself. He might, therefore, he thought, without impropriety say that their President had always stood for peace with honour. So that Americans, in entwining laurels about the headstones which marked the graves of their departed brave, were not sacrificing to the God of War, but were simply emphasizing the appreciation they felt of those who in the hour of their country's need had bared their breasts in defence of their country's honour. As to those bodies who rested there upon that sunny hillside in far Japan they knew but little. Who they were when they died, how they died they knew not individually, but they did know that those men died following the flag of the country—and that was all they cared to know. Whilst those present had no especial grief because of the death of these men, because they were strangers yet they all felt that in honouring such men, they were but giving expression to sentiments that ennobled all, and it was a grateful thought that perhaps at that very moment on a thousand grassy hillsides in "God's country," their countrymen and countrywomen were twining garlands of affection around the head stones of the men who fell in battle or died in hospitals, and in spirit and sentiment the thoughts of all present flew across the broad expanse of waters which divided them from America and they were one with them that day.

The address was followed by the beautiful hymn, "Nearer my God to Thee," and a prayer and benediction by the Rev. A. A. Bennett. Afterwards the two hundred or more bluejackets and marines present formed up, and, preceded by the band playing a dead march, proceeded to the general cemetery, bearing wreaths and chaplets of flowers in prodigal profusion, which were deposited upon and around the monument erected to the memory of the officers and men who were drowned in the sinking of the U.S. cruiser Owens, in Tokyo Bay on January 24th, 1870, and the other American naval graves in the Cemetery. While flowers were being placed upon the monument and mounds the band again played very beautiful and appropriate selections, and the ceremony concluded with the clear notes of the bugle call sounding "Taps," in place of the usual volley from a firing party.

CUSTOMS APPEALS.

Mr. Y. Sakatani, Minister for Finance, on May 24th, gave decisions on two appeals instituted by the Kobe branch of Messrs. Sale and Frazar against decisions given by the Kobe Customs. The firm imported two lots of mild bar steel—one 1,426 bundles and 183 pieces and another 30 bundles—in August last. The appraisers imposed 7½ ad val. duty in accordance with No. 241 of the tariff. The importers filed a protest on each of the two lots, contending that the steel should be dealt with under No. 217 of the tariff. The protests were dismissed and subsequently the importers appealed against the decision. The appeals were also rejected on the ground that the nature of the steel was not mild as insisted on by the appellants.

On May 24th, Mr. Y. Sakatani, Minister for Finance decided an appeal filed by Mr. G. Thomas, the Kobe representative of Messrs. Runge and Thomas. According to the Official Gazette, the German firm imported twenty-five cases of woven goods without any certificate of origin. The Kobe Customs imposed duty at the rate of sen 9.3 per square yard in accordance with No. 337-A. of the tariff. The importers protested to the Customs contending that the goods were worsted crape woven with crisped yarn and that consequently the cloth should be dealt under No. 340 of the same tariff—which provides for other sorts, pure or mixed with other materials, the wool, however, predominating in weight. The appellant further said that he had made contracts with his customer before the arrival of the goods at a price based on the duty to be levied on worsted crepe. The customs held that the goods were a variety of coatings being woven with worsted yarn in warp and weft. The authorities dismissed the protest. The appeal was also rejected on the ground that the goods belong to the class of worsted cloth.

Mr. Y. Sakatani, Minister for Finance, on May 26th, gave a decision in an appeal instituted by the Kobe branch of Messrs. Sale and Frazar against a decision given by the Kobe Customs. The firm imported mild bar steel, 72 bundles and 281 pieces, in August last. The appraisers imposed 7½ ad val. duty in accordance with No. 241 of the tariff. The importers filed a protest contending that the steel should be dealt with under No. 217 of the tariff. The protest was dismissed and subsequently the importers appealed against the decision. The appeal was rejected on the ground that the nature of the steel was not mild as insisted on by the appellants.

According to the Central Meteorological Office, the recent fall in temperature was due to a depression in Hokkaido and Central Japan. On the morning of May 24th, the thermometer read 3 degrees Cent. in Shinano and other provinces in the north-east, and 1 degree cent. in Hokkaido. In the South Kuriles the temperature was below freezing point, and snow fell on May 21st and 22nd.

ATHLETIC SPORTS IN YOKOHAMA.

The craze for feats of muscular endurance which come under the generic title of "Athletic Sports" has long been on the wane in England, and seemingly everywhere else, not omitting Yokohama. The rise of sports in which both sexes can take part has undoubtedly been the principal cause for this falling off in the interest shown in athletic exercises in which only one sex participates, for the present generation is quite as willing to take part in strenuous games upon the greensward as were those which preceded it. Muscular activity has merely taken another form of exposition that is all, so arm-chair philosophers need not, at least at present, moralise upon the degeneracy which the latest phase of mental and physical development portends to the uninitiated. There is no gainsaying the fact that enthusiasm for athletic sports is decidedly of a languid order in Yokohama: the days of the local giants, of Edward Flint Kilby, Alfred Dare, Edgar Abbott, Arthur T. Watson, Harry Vincent and others has passed, and so has the compelling fervour which their feats evoked. On Saturday afternoon the cricket ground was crowded with a very big throng of ladies and gentlemen, not to mention children, perhaps a bigger crowd than ever seen before, but who will deny that the interest shown by the large assemblage in the sports was but of the slightest. The day was gloriously fine, hot, (with rather too much breeze at times, and therefore too much dust, but that is a minor detail); while the excellent band of the U. S. S. Wisconsin played a capital selection of music. The crowd were there to enjoy each others' society, admire the many pretty frocks to be seen, listen to the band—and incidentally watch the sports. With commendable punctuality the events were started and kept up to time, and everything passed off with the greatest satisfaction, for which the following committee men are to be thanked:—Judges—Dr. D. N. B. Emerson, Messrs. D. H. Blake, and W. L. Merriman; Starter—Mr. L. E. McChesney; Clerks of Course—Messrs. W. S. Moss and W. B. White; Handicappers—Messrs. H. W. Kilby, O. Strome, and F. J. Drummond; Timekeepers—Messrs. A. E. Cooper, B. C. Lambert, and O. Strome; Measurers—Messrs. L. S. Hudson and L. D. Tebb. As will be seen, no records were broken, while most of the events brought out the same competitors. The prizes were very handsome and all were in silver, the Ladies' Prize being a very pretty bowl of bold workmanship standing on a blackwood stand. It was presented to the winner, Mr. H. S. Bell with a most graceful speech, by Miss Edith Kilby, who received as her reward a very hearty round of cheering. Events:—

THROWING THE CRICKET BALL.

Club Record, 114 yards 1 foot 8 in., May, 1903, E. W. Kilby. First and Second Prizes presented by the Tea Firms.

J. C. Gonzales, 10 yards .....	1
B. G. Walker, 15 yards .....	2
E. G. Correa, Scratch .....	0
G. C. Gibbs, 5 yards .....	0
T. W. Kilby, 6 yards .....	0
W. H. Worden, 15 yards .....	0

Gonzales threw 103 yards 1 foot 6 in., and adding his handicap we get 113 yards 1 foot 6 in. B. G. Walker, the second man, was far below with 88 yards 1 foot 6 in., which with handicap made 103 yards 1 foot 6 in.

PUTTING THE SHOT.

Club Record 36 feet 8½ inches, May, 1892, R. Nicholson. First and Second Prizes presented by the Yokohama Brokers.

S. H. Gray, 1 ft. 6 ins. ....	1
S. R. Clarke, Scratch .....	2
G. C. Gibbs, 1 ft. 6 ins. ....	0
A. Kingdon, 3 ft. ....	0
W. H. Worden, 4 ft. ....	0
J. C. Gonzales, 4 ft. ....	0

S. H. Gray put the shot 30 ft. 8 in, but his handicap brought the figure to 32 ft. 2 in., S. R. Clarke taking second prize with 31 ft 8 in., from scratch.

HUNDRED YARDS. (Final.)

Club Record 10½ sec., October, 1884, E. Abbott. First and Second Prizes presented by the Insurance Companies.

S. R. Clarke, 1½ yds. ....	1
J. E. Drummond, 4½ yds. ....	2

Time, 11½ sec. The preliminary heats had been run off in the earlier part of the week and the six competitors left in made a game struggle, the winner coming in with but a foot to the good.

HIGH JUMP.

Club Record 5 feet 6¾ inches, June, 1901, W. P. Wise. First and Second Prizes presented by the Bankers.

D. E. M. Drummond 1 in. ....	1
F. G. Correa, 2 ins. ....	2
E. T. Macnamara, Scratch .....	0
E. N. Lambert, 1 in. ....	0
G. Neville, 1½ ins. ....	0
R. G. Bell, 2 ins. ....	0
J. E. Drummond, 2 ins. ....	0
V. A. Hearne, 3½ ins. ....	0

Some keen competition was seen in this event. D. E. Drummond took first prize, his jump (with one inch handicap) being 5ft. 6½ in, F. G. Correa being second with 5ft 6in.

SACK RACE.

Prize presented by the Committee.

D. L. T. Weed .....	1
S. R. Clarke .....	2
A. Kingdon .....	0
H. Y. Irvine .....	0
T. W. Kilby .....	0
H. W. Kilby .....	0
W. S. Moss .....	0
W. B. White .....	0
A. P. Miller .....	0
W. Ross .....	0

The competitors started lying on their backs with heads towards the winning post. Some failed to get on to their feet, but those left in aroused all the laughter usual to the occasion. Weed, first up and away, was never approached and won easily.

120 YARDS HURDLES: Final.

Club Record 17 Sec., May, 1902, J. F. Drummond. First and Second Prizes presented by the Professional Gentlemen of Yokohama.

*W. Graham, 12 yards .....	1
J. E. Drummond, Scratch .....	2
*F. G. Correa, 5 yards .....	0
*D. E. Drummond, 6 yards .....	0
*L. Stornebrink, 10 yards .....	0
*V. A. Hearne, 12 yards .....	0
*F. E. Bunting, 15 yards .....	0

*One Hurdle removed. †Two Hurdles removed. FIRST HEAT:—(1st) W. Graham, (2nd) F. E. Bunting.

SECOND HEAT:—(1st) J. E. Drummond, (2nd) L. Stornebrink.

Time, 17¾ secs. This event was keenly contested and was in doubt almost to the last, Graham getting home just in front of Drummond.

440 YARDS.

Club Record 53 sec., May 1902, C. E. Libeaud. First Prize presented by the Ladies of Yokohama. Second Prize presented by the Committee.

H. S. Bell, 20 yards .....	1
W. H. Worden, 25 yards .....	2
W. B. Mason, Scratch .....	0
T. W. Kilby, 10 yards .....	0
D. E. M. Drummond, 15 yards .....	0
F. E. Bunting, 30 yards .....	0

Time 54½ secs. A capital race, the winner never being challenged after he had passed the limit men.

POLE JUMP.

First Prize presented by the Silk Merchants; Second Prize presented by the Committee.

J. E. Drummond, 6 ins. ....	1
D. E. Drummond, 4 ins. ....	2
E. Powys, Jr. Scratch .....	0
S. R. Clarke, Scratch .....	0
H. S. Bell, 6 ins. ....	0

J. E. Drummond cleared 8 ft. 6 in., beating his brother by one inch.

HALF MILE.

Club Record 2 min. 9 sec., May, 1876, A. H. Dare. First Prize presented by Messrs. Arthur and Bond; Second Prize presented by the Silk Merchants.

D. E. M. Drummond, 10 yards .....	1
G. Neville, 25 yards .....	2
T. W. Kilby, Scratch .....	0
E. F. Johnson, 20 yards .....	0
W. Graham, 20 yards .....	0

Time, 2m. 11½ secs. Drummond led in the second round with Neville in close attendance. Coming down the straight Tom Kilby made a desperate attempt to pass into second place, but evidently left his spurt till too late, for he finished a foot behind Neville.

LONG JUMP.

Club Record 20 feet 11½ inches, May, 1902, J. F. Drummond. First and Second Prizes presented by the Insurance Companies.

F. G. Correa, 1 ft. 6 ins. ....	1
V. A. Hearne, 1 ft. 10 ins. ....	2
W. B. Mason, Scratch .....	0
R. G. Bell, 1 ft. 6 ins. ....	0
E. F. Johnson, 1 ft. 6 ins. ....	0
J. E. Drummond, 2 ft. ....	0

Again a close competition, F. G. Correa, the winner, cleared 19ft. 2m., which with his handicap of 1ft. 6in. made him 20 ft. 8in. Hearne was second with 20 ft. 6in., including handicap of 1ft. 10 in.

The next event, the Bandsmen's race, resulted in an easy win for the Big Drum with the Trombone second.

220 YARDS.

Club Record 25 9/10 sec. May, 1903, C. E. Libeaud. First and Second Prizes presented by the Shipping Companies.

W. H. Worden, 10 yards .....	1
D. L. T. Weed, 8 yards .....	2
W. B. Mason, scratch .....	0
F. G. Correa, 3 yards .....	0
H. S. Bell, 8 yards .....	0

Time, 24 ¼ secs. The five competitors finished almost in a bunch. Worden got home just in front of Weed, who was second.

ONE MILE.

Club Record 4 Min. 45 Secs., May 1876, A. H. Dare. "Dare" Challenge Cup and Gold Medal presented by the Club. Second and Third Prizes presented by the Professional Gentlemen of Yokohama.

W. D. Cameron, 70 yards .....	1
D. E. M. Drummond, 20 yards .....	2
T. W. Kilby, Scratch .....	3
J. E. Drummond, 15 yards .....	0
R. G. Bell, 20 yards .....	0
W. H. Worden, 30 yards .....	0
F. E. Bunting, 100 yards .....	0
B. G. Walker, 100 yards .....	0

Time, 5m. 2sec. A big muster turned out for this race. Cameron got to the front in the first lap and held his own easily to the end, while D. E. Drummond fought for the second position with Tom Kilby.

The Three-legged race was won by D. Weed and L. Stornebrink; the obstacle race by Bedeat, with W. Graham second, and the Married Men's Race by R. J. Ward with E. F. Crowe second and M. Russell third.

Mrs. L. J. Healing presented the prizes at the close and received a handsome bouquet of flowers.

BOYS' BRIGADE SPORTS.

The first athletic sports of the Boys' Brigade (1st Yokohama Company) were held on Wednesday at the Cricket Ground. The weather was most auspicious and quite a large number of spectators, including many ladies, were drawn to the scene. Following were the officers of the day:—Judges: Messrs. D. H. Blake, (Capt.) L. D. Tebb, and (Lieut.) H. W. Kilby; Starter: Mr. J. F. Drummond; Clerk of the Course: (Lieut.) P. E. Nicolle; Handicappers: Messrs. (Lieut.) H. W. Kilby, and S. R. Ford; Timekeepers: Mr. H. Gunn, Dr. D. N. B. Emerson, and Mr. F. O. Stuart.

The prizes were presented after the sports by Mrs. J. L. Dearing.

THE NIPPON YUSEN KAISHA.

Following is the thirty-second report presented at the half-yearly ordinary general meeting of shareholders of the Nippon Yusen Kaisha held in Tokyo on May 28th:—

TO THE SHAREHOLDERS.

Gentlemen:—The Directors submit to you the annexed Statement of the Liabilities and Assets of the Company, and the Profit and Loss Account for the Half-Year, ended March 31st, 1906.

The Gross Profits of the Company for the past Half-Year amount to yen 3,831,762.610, out of which there has been paid:—

Depreciation of the Company's Yen.
fleet and property.....	803,141.500
Insurance Fund.....	337,750.000

YACHTING.

The fresh southerly breeze which had been blowing from midnight and during the forenoon on Saturday, moderated a little about tiffin time, but there was still enough weight in the wind to call for shortened sail in all but the biggest boats. The 39 Raters started at 2 p.m., and five were under way before the preparatory gun, Mary, Kingfisher, Reiver, Nanivwa and Nina. Aborigine was not entered, and the wind was too much for Maid Marion. Reiver and Nina went for the line a little too early, and had to run about half way along it before turning to cross. Mary's skipper timed it to a nicety, as usual, crossing close to the Yamato Damashii right on gunfire. Kingfisher tried to cut it fine across the bows of the Tommy Atkins, with the unfortunate result that an extra heavy puff of wind heeling her at the moment, her mainsail was caught on the schooner's jibboom, and torn to shreds. This unlucky occurrence took most of the interest out of the race, as a good fight between the Kingfisher and Mary had been expected by the verandah captains. Nanivwa spent some time close up by the customs pier while the others were going for the line, and consequently crossed over two minutes after gun fire. Well served by her position at the start, which gave her the wind well on the quarter instead of almost dead aft, Mary had already established a good lead at the Harbour Entrance, with Reiver, Nina and Nanivwa following in order. At the Lightship Mary was 3 minutes ahead of the next boat, and continued to increase her lead all round the course. There was not a minute between the other three at the Lightship, but Nanivwa got ahead of Reiver and Nina before the Widow buoy was reached. In the rough water Nina fairly held her own with Reiver, but whenever they got into smooth Reiver's size and larger sail spread told, and besides Nina would have done better with No. 2 instead of her small No. 3 jib, which gave her too much weather helm. The times at the Nagahama buoy were:—

	HRS.	MIN.
Mary .....	3	32
Nanivwa .....	4	8
Reiver .....	4	12
Nina .....	4	17

Reefs were shaken out by Reiver and Nina for the return journey, the wind having moderated considerably. Mary was well inside the Harbour Entrance before any of the others were in sight from the boat-house verandah, then Nanivwa appeared, ten minutes ahead of Reiver, and fifteen minutes ahead of Nina. At the Lightship five minutes separated these three. Reiver made a poor gybe, her headsheets not being smartly handled. Official times at the finish were as follow:—

	Finish	Club time	Corrected Club time	Arbitrary handicap, on h'cap	Corrected time
Mary .....	4:38.45	0:50	4:37.55	scratch.	4:38.45
Nanivwa .....	5:12.43	15.14	4:57.29	20 mins.	4:52.43
Reiver .....	5:20.07	2.39	5:17.28	30	4:50.07
Nina .....	5:25.42	12.53	5:12.48	30	4:55.42

Mary wins the Aimee Cup, and Reiver takes second prize given by the Club.

Three boats of the Mosquito Yacht Club started, Pe'e, Winsome and Sunbeam. Winsome's mainsail went to pieces shortly after the start, and in the beat down to the Mandarin Bluff mark Sunbeam seemed to find the wind far too strong for her, and her crew had to exercise themselves in bailing. At the finish Pele was timed 30 seconds ahead of Sunbeam, and wins the Secretary's prize.

No boats of the Lark Class ventured out, but it is to be hoped that they will have favourable weather next Saturday, for the Winsome Cup.

At the boat house there was a fine shewing of prizes: the Aimee Cup, a handsome pair of bronzes, for the 39 Raters, the Winsome Cup, of inlaid bronze, to be sailed for by the Dark Class next Saturday, and the Nina Cup, a heavy bronze vase, for the 21 Raters Class, won by Aimee.

THE LAW COURTS.

CHARGE OF ASSAULT.

Judgment has been given in the criminal case against Martinelli Philippe, a sailor on the French steamer Lougor, who was charged with having inflicted injuries on two Japanese working on board the ship.

The Court said, as to the ground of sentence, that the evidence against the man of having injured Hoshinaka, a barber, was insufficient but that the evidence regarding the assault on Hamaguchi, a coolie, was sufficient.

The accused was sentenced to two months' imprisonment with hard labour. He was, however, granted the benefit of two years' letélançère, and would be at once released so that he might leave the country without police surveillance. If he committed no offence in Japanese dominions during the period of grace, he would be entirely acquitted from the sentence.

CLAIM FOR SHORT DELIVERY.

The hearing of a case instituted by a Chinese merchant named Wei Hsiao-chin, No. 190, against Messrs. Helm Bros., claiming yen 2,134 for short delivery of cargo began on May 26th in the Yokohama District Court before Judge Nagata.

Plaintiff was represented by Mr. Futami and the defendants by Mr. Sato.

Plaintiff's Counsel stated that on June 12th last the plaintiff received a consignment from a Chinese firm in Shanghai of 8,000 pieces of beancake, shipped on the British steamer Errol. The defendants undertook the landing of the cargo. Plaintiff received 700 pieces on June 15th, 1,950 pieces on June 24th, and 1,817 pieces on June 26th. The defendants landed the remainder in the Customs compound, in consequence of the early departure of the steamer. After repeated negotiations, they delivered to plaintiff 330 pieces on June 27th, 1,300 pieces on June 30th, and 1,045 pieces on July 7th, altogether totalling 7,142 pieces. The defendants, however, failed to deliver 858 pieces, which in the meantime had decomposed. The defendants also failed to deliver 41 bags out of 618 bags of bean cakes brought by the same steamer. Plaintiff therefore claimed damages for the short delivery.

Defendants' Counsel denying the plaintiff's prayer, asked on what basis the claim was made as to the responsibility of Messrs. Helm Bros.—whether they were representing the ship's owners or merely in the capacity of landing agents.

With regard to the responsibility of Messrs. Helm Bros. as landing agents, a discussion took place between the parties, after which the plaintiff's Counsel asked the Court for an adjournment to enable him to prepare his evidence.

The proceedings were adjourned till June 2nd.

OBJECTION TO SEIZURE.

An action instituted by K. Kanda against H. V. Gielen petitioning for the release of two billiard tables and eight other articles which defendant seized together with the property of a third person, came up again on May 28th in the Yokohama Local Court.

Plaintiff's Counsel said that the statement of a witness who examined, on May 6th, the articles in dispute, at the dwelling of T. Watanabe, the third person, coincided with the contention of the plaintiff with the exception that there was a difference as to the nature of the wooden material of a bed. There was no doubt, added Counsel, that the articles which the defendant had seized together with the property of the third person belonged to the plaintiff.

Defendant's Counsel, summarizing the statement of T. Ogawa, a witness, said that the articles did not all belong to the plaintiff, and asked the Court to dismiss the petition of the plaintiff.

The Court decided to give judgment on May 30th.

CLAIM FOR SHORT DELIVERY.

On May 29th, in the Yokohama District Court, judgment was given in a case in which Messrs. Mendelson Bros. claim twelve hundred yen from Messrs. Butterfield and Swire, the Yokohama agents of the Ocean S.S. Co. and the China Mutual S.N. Co., for the short delivery of cargo.

The Court ordered the defendants to pay yen 758.40 to the plaintiffs and to bear four-fifths of the costs, and ordered the plaintiff's to bear one-fifth of the costs.

OBJECTION TO SEIZURE.

An action instituted by K. Kanda against H. V. Gielen petitioning for the release of two billiard tables and eight other articles which defendant seized together with the property of a third person, came up again on May 31st in the Yokohama Local Court.

The Court gave judgment in favour of the plaintiff.

CLAIM AGAINST A LANDING AGENT.

The hearing of a case filed by K. Iwai, a hardware merchant of Osaka, against Capt. A. Weston, claiming yen 1,276.50, was resumed on May 31st in the Yokohama District Court. Two Japanese customs brokers were examined as expert witnesses.

Mr. I. Hattori, Manager of the Kaitsu Gomei Kaisha, gave a lengthy explanation as to the usage in the shipping and landing business. His conclusion was that all the landing agents were appointed by the shipping agents on account of the consignees, consequently, damage to or short delivery of cargo should be part of the responsibility of the shipping agents.

Mr. T. Inouye was examined. His statement was almost similar to that of the foregoing expert. The special point was that the ship's responsibility for carrying cargo expired at the delivery along side the steamer or at delivery in the enclosure of the customs. In the former case, a consignee took the delivery personally or by his representative and in the latter case the cargo was landed by the landing agent employed by the ship.

Plaintiff's Counsel asked the Court for leave to summon two Japanese named Yanagisawa and Miyauchi as witnesses. The Court decided to examine them on June 19th.

RAILWAYS IN CHINA.

The Nangfangpao, of Shanghai, has the following notes regarding railway enterprise in China:

The officials and gentry of Shansi have decided that the first line of railway to be built by them shall run from Taiyuan-fu to Pingyao, a distance of 300 odd li. They have also received the consent of the Shangpu and decided to build lines from Tatung-fu to Kalgan, via Shioiping-fu, Kueihua-cheng, and Shuyuan-cheng; from Puchou to Tungkuang, passing over the Yellow River; and from Pingyang to Tschou, connecting with the Taokou and Tschou Railway. They are also raising capital to build a railway from Taiyuan-fu to a point on the Peking-Kalgan Railway, through Hsuanhuacheng and Sungchkuang. The Kai-feng-Chengchou line, 140 li in length, is completed but for the laying down of the rails and is expected to be entirely completed and in running order during the coming 5th moon. A Chinese Chief Engineer has been appointed for the Hangchow-Soochow Railway and capital is being collected by the gentry and people of Chékian province. The first line will run from Kungshun Bridge, near Kiangkan, a distance of 45 li along the Chientang River, whence it will be pushed on to Kashing and Soochow. The Governor of Shantung has memorialised the Throne that the concession granted to Germany for the Chinanfu-Chingting Railway has been redeemed and preparations for the construction of this line are progressing. The necessary funds have been raised for the construction of a railway from Tsitsihar to Aiqun and work will be undertaken at once. The sanction of the Shangpu has been obtained for the construction of a railway line from Thua, capital of Chinese Turkistan, to Kashing, in Mongolia, partly for commercial purposes and partly to forestall a possible design on the part of Russia to construct such a line.

The Waiwupu is objecting to the fourth article of the Canton-Kowloon railway agreement in which it is provided that the engineers shall be all British and recommended by H. E. the Governor of Hongkong. Viceroy Tsên of Canton has been ordered to have this article revised.

The Shangpu are memorialising the Throne to delegate a member of their Board to Canton to investigate matters with regard to the Canton-Hankow railway.

THE MONUMENTAL CHARITIES OF A RELIGIOUS NEWSPAPER.

Residents in Japan will no doubt be interested in the following particulars regarding the Christian Herald of New York, which played such a prominent part in raising the huge American contribution to the Japan Famine Fund:—

The Christian Herald of New York is a journal whose whole history for the last fifteen years has been a remarkable record of world-wide religious and philanthropic activities. It has the most widely extended circle of readers of any religious journal in the world, and its army of 200 correspondents includes missionaries, pastors, scientists, famous authors, and men and women prominent in all habitable lands. For a decade and a half it has been the acknowledged channel through which benevolently-disposed Americans have distributed alms and relief in those countries that have come under the harrow of affliction and widespread suffering, through plague, famine, or other causes.

In 1892 it sent the food laden steamer Leo to Russia with a cargo of flour and medicines for the peasant sufferers in sixteen famine-stricken provinces. This charity was the means of saving thousands of lives. Similar relief expeditions were undertaken to Armenia (1896), when many American missionaries and officials cooperated; to Cuba (1898), when Dr. Klopsch, its Proprietor, was appointed by President McKinley as a member of the Government Commission for the relief of the starving reconcentrados, and when he again did personal work in the field; to India (1897 and 1900), when the readers of the paper contributed so liberally that two steamships, the City of Everett and the Quilo, were loaded with breadstuffs and dispatched to India, resulting in an immense saving of human lives during the great famine; to China (1901), when, with the co-operation of our American missionaries, famine-stricken Shansi was succored and saved; to Finland and Sweden (1903), when America's gifts saved thousands of the starving Finns, Lapps and Swedes—a work which received the warmest recognition from the King and royal princes of Norway and Sweden. More recently (1905) The Christian Herald, with the aid of its generous readers, forwarded the means whereby United States Consul-General McWade, at Canton, equipped a fleet with food and medicines for the famine sufferers of Kwang-si province. For the last five years its readers have supported over 5,000 orphans in India, training and educating them to Christian manhood and womanhood. It is now doing a similar benevolent work among the orphan children of China and Africa.

Its benevolences, however, have not been wholly expended in other lands than our own. During the terrible winter of 1895, when over 100,000 men were idle in New York, and their families suffering keenly for lack of the necessities of life, the Christian Herald raised a substantial fund for their relief. In 1895 it came to the rescue of the stricken farmers of Kansas, Nebraska, and Colorado, to whom it sent trainloads of coal, food and clothing, besides distributing a large relief fund through Home Missionaries and State Relief Committees. In 1900 it sent help to the sufferers at Galveston, Texas, who were imperilled by the great flood of that year; and in 1903 it gave similar aid to those who had suffered through the inundations at Kansas City, Topeka, and other places.

For nearly ten years past the Christian Herald has maintained the Bowery Mission in New York, which, besides giving the Gospel message to over 126,000 souls annually, has served, every winter, free breakfasts to over one thousand unemployed and homeless men and lads every morning before daylight. Its Free Labour Bureau has provided work for thousands of the worthy poor. The Christian Herald Children's Home at Mount Lawn on the Hudson, in twelve years, has sheltered and cared for nearly 26,000 boys and girls, poor child-waifs of the New York tenements, an average of 2,200 every summer.

In these fifteen years the Christian Herald and its proprietor, with the co-operation of its generous readers, has expended in various charities and benevolences a grand total of over two and a half million dollars. It is read every week by over a million persons, and it is a mighty and ever-increasing influence for good on the times in which we live.

THE STRAWBERRY FETE.

The Strawberry Fête held in the Bluff Gardens on Thursday in aid of the funds of the Ladies International Reading Room was favoured with beautiful weather. Mrs. Merriman, Mrs. J. L. Dearing and other ladies are to be congratulated on the success which attended the function.

AMERICAN FOOTBALL.

The game of American football played on Thursday afternoon on ground situate near Magane-cho between teams from the U. S. S. Ohio and Wisconsin, resulted in an easy win for the former, by 20 points to nil. Five players were temporarily disabled. The enthusiasm of the spectators, most of whom were from the competing ships, was intense.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

The gun-boat Tsukushi has been removed from active service.

Captain K. Yasuhara has been promoted to the rank of Rear-Admiral.

At 9.26 p.m. on May 30th, a slight shock of earthquake was felt in Yokohama.

Prince Nashimoto will shortly leave for Europe and America for purposes of study.

The Nisshin Maru will leave Ujina on May 27th for Chemulpo carrying two hundred soldiers.

Sir John M. Jordan, new British Minister to Peking, will leave Liverpool on June 7th for his post.

The Hochi reports that Marquis Ito will leave on June 10th for Manchuria to investigate various matters.

The sale of Horses, postponed from the 22nd will be held on the Bund on Wednesday the 6th June at 2 p.m.

At 11.22 p.m. on May 29th, a slight shock of earthquake was felt in Yokohama, the duration being 2m. 20sec.

A slight shock of earthquake was felt in Yokohama, at 5.59 a.m. on May 28th, the duration being 3 m. 45s.

Owing to scarcity of rain, almost all the wells in Yokosuka have dried up. Water is being supplied from Yokohama.

We have received yen 10 from Mr. J. W. Hambleton, Richmond, Va., which he wishes to be applied to Famine Relief in Tohoku.

The Queen of Italy has just offered an international cup to be presented to the first aeronaut who succeeds in crossing the Alps by balloon.

The Kawasaki Shipbuilding Company, Kobe, held a general meeting on May 30th, and decided to add six million yen on the present capital.

The battleship Katori, which was delivered on May 20th to the Japanese, will leave Glasgow on June 7th and is expected to arrive on Aug. 27th at Yokosuka.

Cricket has begun in Kobe, the second game this season taking place on Saturday between A. to J. and I. to Z. A. to J. made 184 runs and the other side 30 for 7 wickets.

Mr. T. Amano, a well-known financier, and about fifty prominent merchants and politicians of Tokyo met on the evening of May 27th at the Metropole Hotel and organized a society for investigating post-bellum financial affairs.

A correspondent in Osaka kindly points out a printer's error in a recent paragraph. He says that the late Bishop Bickersteth was consecrated to the Diocese of Exeter in 1885, not 1855 as we printed. We thank him for his courteous correction.

The Iroquois Theatre Company of Chicago has been placed in the hands of a receiver at Jersey City. The company confessed to no assets and liabilities of 52,000,000 in damage suits, filed by scores of people after the burning of the theatre in Chicago in December, 1902.

A Kanazawa telegram says that S. Masuda, an accountant belonging to the ninth regiment, who has returned from Russia, was sentenced by the Court Martial to two years' imprisonment with hard labour. It is said that he deserted from his own army and gave himself up to the enemy.

The Jiji has a telegram from Nagasaki stating that the British squadron in the Far East under Vice-Admiral Sir Arthur William Moore will at Nagasaki arrive on June 15th. The fleet will extend its visit to Kobe and Yokohama, arriving on June 28th and July 7th respectively.

The Royal Bank of Canada has completed arrangements for the importation of British gold direct to Canada and the new C. P. R. Royal Mail steamship Empress of Britain on her maiden trip from Liverpool carried in her specie room the first consignment, amounting to $1,000,000 in bullion. Heretofore such imports have been made through New York, owing to the superiority up to the present time of the ships running to that port. The advent of the C. P. R. Empress steamers, however, no longer makes that necessary.

A case of alleged fraud is reported in Osaka, two small merchants named G. Nakayama and T. Maeda being arrested on May 25th. It is reported by the Asahi that they made several false bills of lading for rice which they pretended was sent from Osaka to Moji by a steamer of the Shosen Kaisha. They also made out drafts to be attached to the shipping documents and drew yen 4,750 on the 58th Bank, yen 2,200 on the Osaka branch of the Yokkaichi Bank and about yen 15,000 at various other banks. It is reported by the same paper that another man has been arrested at Kurume in Kyushu on suspicion of having assisted in the fraud.

Miss Mary van Buren, who played in Yokohama while passing through some three years ago with a strong theatrical company, has returned to New York, opening a short season on April 30th at Daly's. She had a warm welcome home. The dramatic critic of the New York Commercial said of her:—Miss Van Buren has been beguiling the good people of Calcutta and Hongkong, Singapore and Yokohama with more stirring work, and I, for one, would love to see her play some of the heroines with which she has been charming her Indian and other Asiatic admirers. "Cousin Louisa" is all very well for an introduction, but now that we have shaken hands can we not have something better and stronger by way of becoming better acquainted?

During a remarkable thunderstorm in the State of Queensland in May an extraordinary phenomenon was witnessed at a place called Cooper's Plains, near Brisbane. In the midst of the rain there suddenly fell from the skies a large number of young fish. The fish fell at first in twos and threes but subsequently came in dozens, until a large area of ground was strewn with live fish measuring from one and a half inches to three inches. Experts in the district described the fish as of fresh water variety never before seen near Brisbane. The theory accounting for the phenomenon most generally accepted is that the storm generated a waterspout in one of the rivers and that the fish were sucked up by it and carried by the wind some long distance before being dropped.

Y.M.C.A. ARMY WORK.

GENERAL TERAUCHI'S LETTER OF APPRECIATION OF THE WORK OF THE YOUNG MEN'S CHRISTIAN ASSOCIATION.

The Young Men's Christian Association, moved by the desire to minister to the welfare and comfort of our officers and soldiers at the front, carried on its beneficent work throughout the Russo-Japanese war of 1904-1905. Beginning at Chinampio early in September, 1904, it kept pace with the northward progress of the field forces for nearly twenty long months, until March 1906, establishing its work at eleven posts in Manchuria and Korea. At large expense of money and labour and by a great variety of means, it filled the leisure of our officers and soldiers, far from home, with wholesome recreation. The completeness of the equipment and the success of the enterprise were universally tested and recognized by our troops in the field. I am fully assured that the recipients of all this generous service are filled with deep and inexpressible gratitude.

Now, simultaneously with the triumphant return of our armies, as I learn of the successful termination of your enterprise, I take this opportunity to express my heartfelt thanks for your noble services, and at the same time to voice my appreciation of the generosity of all those who have either by gifts or by personal effort supported the work.

(Signed)

M. TERAUCHI,
Minister of War.

Tokyo, 26th May, 39th Meiji, (1906).

President, The Japanese Young Men's Christian Association Union.

CORRESPONDENCE.

THE FAMINE COMMITTEE.

(TO THE EDITOR OF THE "JAPAN MAIL.")

SIR,—We have recently received a number of letters from persons to whom money has come from America and other lands for the benefit of the famine sufferers in north Japan asking if our Committee could still use such sums. Our reply is that the situation has improved greatly and that there is no longer the suffering in amount nor in degree that there was a few months ago. Tens of thousands are however being provided with food for every day.

We will continue to receive funds until May 31st—the date set nearly two months ago—and a few days later will hold a committee meeting to decide as to the best use for whatever amount may still be in the treasury. If any donor wishes to designate a particular object we will be glad to receive such contributions and pass them over to the proper persons.

The Christian Herald recently sent in fifty thousand yen and gave us the privilege of using for general famine relief or for orphanages. We divided the sum equally between the Tohoku Ikuji-in, an orphanage opened this winter in Sendai for children from the famine region, and the Okayama Orphanage which has taken in about 850 and children.

The Committee has received in all nearly 100 V hundred thousand yen.

Yours, etc.

NEW SHIPPING COMBINE.

The Cunard, Peninsular and Oriental and the Orient Pacific announce a joint Eastern-Australian service.

DISARMAMENT.

Later.

During the debate upon disarmament in the House of Lords Lord Ripon drew a distinction between reduction of expenditure and disarmament. While the Government would do its utmost to reduce expenditure it was its duty to provide ample security for the empire. Disarmament was impossible without a general understanding between the Powers.

THE DUMA.

London, May 28.

Saturday night's meeting of the Duma was momentous. After passionate speeches of protest from the Democratic leaders the Duma, with seven dissentients, passed a resolution demanding the instant resignation of the Ministry and its replacement by a Cabinet having the confidence of the House.

STRONG STAND OF THE REICHSTAG.

London, May 29.

The German Reichstag has practically rejected the whole supplementary Estimates for South-west Africa, and subsequently refused the Government any money to establish the Ministry of Colonies. This severe rebuff to the Government is mainly due to the hectoring speech of Colonel Deimling, who has just been appointed to the command in South Africa. Speaking in the Reichstag in a stentorian voice as if before troops on the drill ground, he declared his determination to ignore certain recommendations of the Budget Committee, unless otherwise directed by the Emperor, who alone had the power to decide.

The lecture caused a tremendous uproar.

"KATORI" AND "KASHIMA."

The Japanese battleship Katori, which is at Portsmouth, remains there for a fortnight. The Kashima will join her on June 2.

THE CHINESE CUSTOMS.

Later.

Speaking in the House of Lords, Earl Fitzmaurice said that China's reply to the last Note was expected to-day. The British Government did not intend to allow protracted delay in settling the question, fully realising its importance, and also acting with the knowledge that the other Powers were in perfect harmony with Great Britain.

JAPAN'S TRAINING SQUADRON.

The Japanese Training Squadron has left Sydney, homeward bound.

CHINA AND HER CUSTOMS.

London, May 30.

Sir Edward Grey, speaking in the House of Commons, says that China has promised to reaffirm formally that the administration of the Customs will continue as at present constituted.

THE TEA DUTY.

The House of Commons, in Committee of the Whole, has agreed to a five-penny duty on tea, after rejecting by a vote of 275 to 170 an amendment reducing the duty to four pence.

CHICAGO MEAT PACKING REVELATIONS.

There is great excitement throughout America owing to revelations made by Mr. Neil, the Labour Commissioner, who inspected the meat packing houses in Chicago and discovered horrible malpractices in the shape of converting putrifying matter into canned meat.

THE DUMA.

London, May 30.

The Duma yesterday disregarding the Government declaration continued to discuss measures for the better treatment of the people.

THE EDUCATION BILL.

The House of Commons adopted the first clause of the Education Bill by 365 to 162.

THE REICHSTAG.

The Reichstag had another stormy sitting yesterday owing to the Government declaring that the decision to reduce the troops in Damaraland was a matter for the Kaiser only, and to the revelation that the Kaiser had made the reduction in the contingent himself.

COTTAGE IMPROVEMENT IN IRELAND.

With the view of arresting physical decline of the population and instilling new hope into the Irish labouring classes Mr. Bryce, Chief Secretary for Ireland, has introduced a bill authorising the loan of four and a half millions to provide 25,000 labourers cottages in Ireland. Fifty-thousand pounds annually derived from various economies will be devoted to the same object.

BRITISH POLITICS.

London, May 31.

There are strong rumours of impending ministerial readjustments. Lord Ripon is mentioned as likely to retire and it is expected that Mr. Winston Churchill, Under Secretary for the Colonies, will be promoted.

JAPANESE EMIGRATION.

Plans have been completed in New York for the colonization by several thousand Japanese of an area in south-western Texas. It is said that 520,000 acres have been acquired.

THE DERBY.

The result of the Derby is:—

Spearhead .....	1
Piston .....	2
Troutbeck .....	3

BRITISH BATTLESHIP ASHORE.

Later.

The British battleship Montagu (launched at Devonport on the 5th of March, 1901), 14,000 tons, Capt. Thomas Adair, is badly ashore in the British Channel. She has lost both of her propellers, and it is doubtful whether she can be refloated. The crew were saved, but several were injured. Several of her compartments and the stokeholds are full of water. She is listing heavily.

FRENCH FINANCES.

It is anticipated that the deficit in the French budget will amount to £9,000,000 sterling. It is partly due to extraordinary naval expenses.

MR. CHURCHILL.

The Colonial Office denies the transfer of Mr. Churchill.

ANOTHER NAVAL DISASTER.

British torpedo-boat No. 108 collided with No. 81 in the Channel and both are badly damaged.

FISHERY RIGHTS.

[Received at the Foreign Office from Mr. Kawakami Japanese Commercial Agent in Vladivostok. Dated 27th instant.]

The Governor-General of the Amur has announced that the six-year periods recently declared will all be changed to one year, namely, the current year.

AUSTRALIA'S WELCOME.

(Received by the Naval Department from Admiral Kamimura, commanding the Training Squadron. Sydney, 26th May.)

The greatest sympathy and respect are shown for our country everywhere in Australia. There is a most genuine disposition to welcome the new Anglo-Japanese alliance. Since the Squadron reached Australia, the representatives of the ships have received the warmest possible greeting at Melbourne, Sydney and elsewhere. The honours done to me myself could not be surpassed. At Sydney a brilliant welcome was given, the streets were illuminated with legends in favour of the alliance, and no day passed without some demonstration, official or private.

(By Special Arrangement with the "Tokyo Asahi Shimbun.")

RUSSIA'S POLICY.

London, May 28.

Telegrams from St. Petersburg say that the Ministry's declaration read before the Duma proclaimed its intention of adhering to a policy of repression. The Duma resolved that the Ministry were unfit for office. Intense excitement prevailed.

FRENCH FINANCES.

Paris, May 30.

The French Minister for Finance has objected to the Army and Navy estimates. He says that it is impossible to balance the budget. The Government will propose an income tax.

FRENCH BUDGET.

Paris, May 31.

The financial situation in France is serious. The deficit is £9,000,000, mainly due to expenditures on defences previous to the Algeiras conference.

Skin-Tortured Babies AND TIRED MOTHERS Find Comfort in Cuticura

INSTANT RELIEF and refreshing sleep for Skin-tortured Babies and rest for Tired Mothers in warm baths with CUTICURA SOAP, and gentle anointings with CUTICURA OINTMENT, the great skin cure and purest of emollients, to be followed in severe cases by mild doses of CUTICURA RESOLVENT PILLS, to cool and cleanse the blood. This is the purest, sweetest, most speedy, permanent, and economical treatment for torturing, disfiguring, itching, burning, bleeding, scaly, crusted, and pimply humours, eezemas, rashes, irritations, and itchings, with loss of hair, of infants and children, yet compounded.

MILLIONS USE CUTICURA SOAP

Assisted by CUTICURA OINTMENT, for preserving, purifying, and beautifying the skin, for cleansing the scalp of crusts, scales, and dandruff, and the stopping of falling hair, for softening, whitening, and soothing red, rough, and sore hands, for baby rashes, itchings, and chafings, in the form of baths for annoying irritations and inflammations, or too free or offensive perspiration, in the form of washes for ulcerative weaknesses, and for many sanative, antiseptic purposes which readily suggest themselves to women, especially mothers, and for all the purposes of the toilet, bath, and nursery. No other medicated soap ever compounded is to be compared with it for preserving, purifying, and beautifying the skin, scalp, hair, and hands. No other foreign or domestic toilet soap, however expensive, is to be compared with it for all the purposes of the toilet, bath, and nursery. Thus it combines in ONE SOAP at ONE PRICE, the BEST skin and complexion soap, and the BEST toilet and BEST baby soap in the world.

CUTICURA RESOLVENT PILLS (Chocolate Coated) are a new, tasteless, odourless, economical substitute for the celebrated liquid CUTICURA RESOLVENT, as well as for all other blood purifiers and humour cures. Put up in screw-cap pocket vials, containing 60 doses.

CUTICURA REMEDIES are sold throughout the world. Australian Depot: R. Towns & Co., Sydney. British Depot: 27-28, Charterhouse Sq., London. French Depot: 8 Rue de la Paix, Paris. Forras Duro and Cassa Corp., Sole Props., Boston, U. S. A.

The train leaving Yokohama at 7.30 a.m. will arrive at Nikko at 1.57 p.m. the same day, and the train leaving Nikko at 9 a.m. will arrive at Yokohama at 3.10 p.m. The new arrangement will come into force about the middle of June.

THE draft for a law regarding the Government lottery in Formosa being completed it has been sent to the Cabinet by the Bureau of Legislative Affairs. Some Tokyo papers say that the proposal, which passed in the last session of the Diet, will receive the approval of the Cabinet and the Privy Council and will shortly be promulgated.

CHINA.

Saturday, June 2.

The Hochi Shimbun's Peking correspondent says that the Chinese Government has agreed to hand to the British Legation a written declaration containing three articles. The first is that the assurance given by the Tsungli Yamèn in 1898 to the British Government shall be respected; the second, that there shall be no change in the administration of the Customs; and the third, that the competence of the Inspector-General of Customs—not Sir Robert Hart only but also his successors up to 1948—shall remain as hitherto. This declaration has been drafted and awaits only the consent of Prince Ching. It is considered quite satisfactory and thus the Customs question has been settled for the next forty odd years.

Sunday, June 3.

The settlement foreshadowed above is stated by later telegrams to have been actually made. A document has been sent to the British Legation from the Waiwupu, declaring that no change is contemplated in the administration of the Customs and that pending the discharge of China's liabilities for which the Customs dues are pledged, no change will be made. One or two words in the despatch are said to be somewhat objectionable but on the whole it is satisfactory, and the question may be regarded as settled.

Mukden seems to have been the scene of continuous festivities on the 1st instant when it became open to the trade of the world. The celebrations commenced with a luncheon given by the Governor-General to Mr. Consul-General Hagiwara and the members of the Japanese Consular staff. At 3 in the afternoon there was a congratulatory party at the Japanese Consulate, and in the evening Mr. Hagiwara entertained the Governor-General, the principal officials of his Yamen, and several of the leading Japanese and Chinese merchants. It is futile to speculate how long Manchuria would have remained closed had not the war taken place, but we may at least assume that no time will now be lost in opening it completely. Probably the Three Eastern Provinces will soon become the best administered section of the Chinese Empire.

It turns out that the reports of the Emperor of China's illness were much exaggerated, as we ventured to affirm at the time. His Majesty has quite recovered, and is to receive in audience the new French Minister on the 4th inst.

Monday, June 4.

The Fiji Shimpō, apparently on its own authority, makes a statement not without interest. It concerns Mr. Douglas Story, the Far-Eastern correspondent of the Tribune, who distinguished himself some time ago by telegraphing to the journal he represents a wonderful tale about the Emperor of Korea's complaints, and who has adopted a strong anti-Japanese tone in all his communications to the Tribune. The Fiji's statement is that Mr. Story, who is now in Peking, was suddenly recalled by the Tribune, and that the summons caused him much chagrin. He immediately wired to London that as war would certainly break out between Russia and China in the month of June, he desired to be left in the Far East pending that event. The interest of this account lies in the prediction of imminent war. We, like many others, have hitherto remained in complete ignorance that such a catastrophe was in sight.

It appears that the correspondent of the Morning Post in Japan telegraphed to that journal the rumour recently current in Japan, namely, that the opening of Mukden and Manchuria generally would be a futile act so long as Russia retained control of the Sungari River. The publication of this rumour has elicited a letter from a correspondent whose name we can not decipher (Nichi Nichi Shimbun's London service) to the effect that Russia under the provisions of the Aigun convention, holds the right of controlling this water-way and that no third Power has any competence to challenge her right. The question thus becomes very interesting. Japanese journals have stated that to open Changchun and Harbin without the privilege of free transport by the Sungari would be like opening Mukden and Faku-mun while keeping the Liao River closed. We do not see it.

Some time ago the Manchurian military telegraphs were placed at the service of the general public, but the convenience did not in practice amount to so much as might have been expected owing to the fact that facilities for distributing the messages were defective. Unless the addressees lived in the immediate vicinity of the station the telegrams were delivered by post. Now, however, it has been decided to employ Chinese coolies for purposes of delivery provided that the addressee is not more than  $2\frac{1}{2}$  miles distant from the station.

A strange piece of news is telegraphed from Canton. It is to the effect that a British merchant steamer, the Tanyu, and a gun-boat whose name has been transliterated beyond recognition, have been fired on at a point between Samshui and Wuchou in the Canton river. One of the crew is reported to have been wounded, but to which crew he belonged we can not discern. The incident is attributed to anti-foreign feeling, but that, of course, is mere conjecture. Some special cause is much more credible.

A destructive fire is announced to have taken place on the 26th of May at Hailung-cheng in the Mukden district. Five hundred houses were destroyed. The loss in one case is put at a hundred thousand yen, but no estimate is yet given of the total loss.

Tuesday, June 5.

The Hochi Shimbun's Peking correspondent wires that on the 2nd instant the Empress Dowager and the Emperor—who has now completely recovered—held a State Council at the Summer Palace. The leading members of the Ministry were present, and the subjects discussed were the customs affair, the Nanchang complication and the negotiations with Russia. Concerning the last problem Prince Ching is said to have reported that unless both sides made concessions a settlement would be impossible. If that be true, and of course there is ample margin for query, Russia must be endeavouring to compensate herself at China's expense for what she lost in the encounter with Japan. It is very natural that she should make the endeavour, and truly, speaking as pure outsiders, we can not but think that principles of justice are violated when China, who raised not a finger in self-defence while a bloody and terrible war was waged within her territory by two Great Powers, should emerge from the complication unscathed and unscathed. Whether any State except Japan would have fought her battles for her unrewarded and would have recovered for her a large area of her dominions gratis, is a question that no reader of history can find difficulty in answering. But as for Russia, she may not sympathise with that kind of game, and who will blame her if in her negotiations with Peking she obeys more old-fashioned and familiar ethics. The interesting thing will be to learn what pleas she advances to be rewarded by the owner of Manchuria for her failure to appropriate that fragment of property.

In this context we read with some amusement a statement made by the same correspondent that M. Pokotiloff has tendered to the Chinese Government some "friendly advice." His Excellency is perturbed by the news that Japanese prominent statesmen are making arrangements to visit and inspect Manchuria. He thinks that the outcome of this procedure will be to fix upon the southern part of the Three Provinces a Japanese yoke heavier than the Russian yoke would ever have been, and he warns China to be on her guard. If that be true it is not very artistic on M. Pokotiloff's part, though there is one attractive feature in the performance, namely, that a Russian Minister has special faculties for diagnosing the first symptoms of an act of aggression.

At the time of the disturbance among the Chinese students in Tokyo the Viceroy of the two Kiang sent to Japan a certain Mr. Ma, whose function was to conduct investigations and to report their result. Mr. Ma investigated duly, and discovered a very large mare's nest, an account of which he subsequently conveyed to the Viceroy. Count Okuma and Marquis Ito are the principal figures. The former is represented as having observed to the latter that a Residency-General having been established in Korea, the next step should be to establish one in China, and that, when the latter step was taken, no one could possibly be fitter for the post of Resident than he, Count Okuma. Mr. Ma further reported that at the time of the Nanchang and Kiangsi disturbances the Japanese journals in Tokyo contended that the control of the Chinese police ought to be placed in Japanese hands; and finally that Count Okuma is employing the Waseda University as an instrument for establishing relations with the Chinese literati, thus preparing for Japan to swallow up the Middle Kingdom. The Hochi Shimbun, from which we gather these details, observes that Ma's story is inexpressibly amusing, and we may add the comment that in the one instance where Mr. Ma deals with anything more solid than hearsay and hypothesis, namely, in his reference to the contents of Japanese journals, he errs on the side of falsehood, for the Tokyo press never advocated or even suggested the measure he attributes to them.

The railway arrangements in Mukden labour under one signal disadvantage, namely, that the stations of the line from Talien are all in different parts of the town and moreover are much too small to meet the increasing demands of the traffic. Japanese engineers are therefore drawing up plans to combine the three stations into one, and to give to the new edifice such dimensions as shall amply suffice. Nothing is said as to the source of funds.

Thursday, June 7.

We learn from a Mukden telegram to the Asahi Shimbun that on the 2nd instant a party of mounted bandits attacked a train near Changtu and succeeded in appropriating 9,000 stands of modern German rifles which were being conveyed to the Governors of the Amur and Kirin regions by order of Viceroy Yuan. The telegram adds that there were several persons wounded, from which it must be inferred that a combat of some kind took place but by what force the Hung-hutsz were opposed we do not gather. These bandits are evidently bent on making the most of their opportunities with the least possible delay. It was on June 1st that the Japanese, in accordance with the Portsmouth Treaty, handed over to Chinese jurisdiction the region northward of the Fakumun-Tiehling-Fushun line, and on the very next day the Hung-hutsz achieved the above feat at a point within the evacuated district. But though from June 1st the Chinese local authorities assumed the responsibility of preserving order in these districts, the railway is supposed to be under the protection of Japanese guards, and we must presume, in the absence of contradiction, that they were the force which unsuccessfully endeavoured to beat off the Hung-hutsz. It is possible, however, that these arms were not being conveyed by rail. The Fiji Shimpō has a telegram on the same subject from Mukden and it says nothing about the railway. At all events what daily become plainer is that unless some drastic measures are taken to deal with the Hung-hutsz, the opening of Manchuria must remain a futile formula.

It has been decided, says the Nichi Nichi, that a company shall be formed to work the Fushun Coal Mine and the East Chinese Railway. The Company's capital will be 15 million yen, one half of which will be put up by the Japanese Government and the remainder by Japanese and Chinese shareholders. It is further stated that foreign capital will be obtained for the development of the enterprise. Our contemporary adds that this arrangement will be the subject of an Imperial Ordinance issued very shortly.

THE "NOVOYE VREMYA."

It is well to place on local record the fact that the Novoye Vremya is doing its best to create an anti-Japanese feeling in Russia and Europe. Japan, according to that journal, has not withdrawn and is not withdrawing her troops for Manchuria. She is deliberately preparing the scaffolding for a new edifice of aggression, and she is doing everything in her power to incite Mongolian sentiment against the Occident. China is in a measure compelled to fall in with Japan's policy, for southern Manchuria has passed into Japanese possession and the Throne in Peking is swayed by Japanese influence. There is a great deal more in the same sense. It is ably written—indeed the skill of the writer is the only fact to which the Fiji Shimpō alludes in translating the article—but the bias is so evident that no soberly judging person will be misled. However, the point to be noted is that this incitement to a new outburst of enmity comes from the Russian side. It may be necessary to recall this record by and bye.

The same journal's Far Eastern correspondent declares that a secret treaty has been concluded between Japan and China. He makes this statement on the strength of information furnished by a Russian staff-officer at Harbin. The treaty consists of 7 articles, providing that China must send her young men to Japan to study military and naval science; that in case of urgency Japanese subjects shall be engaged to train the Chinese army in Mongolia; that under no circumstances shall Russian or German instructors be employed; that in the event of war China shall cooperate with Japan; that, in the same event, China shall place at Japan's disposal a certain number of ports as well as such places on shore as the Japanese military authorities may choose; that all articles required by the Chinese army or navy shall be ordered from Japan; and that China, whatever happens, shall not cede to any foreign Power any part of her territories bordering on Russia's dominions or any part of Ili, this veto to hold good even though China be threatened with war. The Fiji Shimpō justly remarks that this Russian staff officer has remarkable powers of invention.

Another count in the indictment against Japan is that she has laid a submarine cable to Saghalien and that she is devoting to the development of the island's resources a degree of energy incommensurate with any reasonable estimate of normal profits. In short, whatever Japan does is wrong in the eyes of the Novoye Vremya and the authors of the propaganda to which it lends its columns.

The Novoye Vremya continues to publish articles designed to impair Russo-Japanese relations and the Fiji Shimpō continues to reproduce them. They will certainly do harm, but it is our opinion that Japanese statesmen are too level-headed to be greatly perturbed by the writings of any newspaper. Moreover, they can easily discern that the writer of the articles is a man of extraordinary credulity or exceptional inventive faculties, and that he can not in either case be a representative Russian. One of his striking tales is that the Japanese owed their naval victories to English kindness. In the early engagements the honours were about equally divided, a fact due to the use of ordinary bursting charges by the Japanese, the same bursting charges as those employed by the Russians. Had they continued to load their shells in the old manner they would have been unlikely to come out victorious, certainly not signally victorious. But, during the course of the war, experiments conducted in England disclosed new methods of loading shells, and these methods having been communicated to Japan, she quickly profited by them with terribly efficacious results, as any one looking at the state of the Orel when she emerged from the action in the Sea of Japan, could have easily seen. From this interesting piece of news the Russian Journal goes on to draw a very deterrent picture of the Japanese people. They are declared to be determined on renewing the war at no distant date. Siberia and the whole of Russia's possessions in that quarter of Asia are their aim. They fully recognise the mistake they made in the last war, the mistake of abandoning the combat too soon, and they will not repeat such an error. People who imagine that the Japanese forces have been withdrawn from southern Manchuria are egregiously mistaken. The Japanese have five or six hundred thousand men there and will keep them there. They will attack from two directions, striking at Vladivostok from the west and at Harbin from the south. There is nothing to prevent them. Military experts are agreed upon that. Already their spies are busily at work in the garb of tradesmen, and several have been arrested at Harbin and Vladivostok. In short, the Novoye Vremya does everything in its power to convince the Russian nation and the world that Japan is determined upon a war of aggression and that nothing will turn her from her purpose. She is pursuing it, too, in defiance of all her promises, and unless Russia prepares vehemently she will be effaced in East Asia.

The question is, does the writer in the Novoye Vremya believe the story he recounts. Is it possible to answer in the affirmative? His assertion about the continued presence of five or six hundred thousand Japanese troops in southern Manchuria is sufficient to convict him of disregard for truth, it being quite impossible that a man who has studied the Far-Eastern problem at all could credit such a palpable untruth. The Japanese doubtless appreciate this, and consequently understand that the St. Petersburg journal has opened its columns to a writer whose unscrupulous aim is to create mischief and who does not represent intelligent Russian opinion. But will the masses in Russia be equally discerning? Is it not greatly to be feared that they will learn to regard Japan with suspicion and hatred, and that there will thus be educated a mood which can not fail to complicate any question arising between the two Powers. The arrests, almost wanton arrests, of Japanese subjects on charges of spying, are indications that Russia is already suffering from nervousness, and at such a time writings like these of the Novoye Vremya may do great harm.

The St. Petersburg correspondent of the Fiji Shimpō gives an interesting explanation of the exceedingly inflammatory writing that has been recently appearing in the columns of the Novoye Vremya and the Slavo. Stated in the briefest terms the explanation is that these two journals are seeking to resuscitate the spirit of imperialism among the Russian Liberals. The political struggle between these latter and the bureaucrats has had the effect of discrediting the doings of the aristocratic oligarchy abroad as well as at home in the eyes of the Liberals. They never took much interest in the expansion of the Empire towards Far-Eastern Asia. Siberia was associated in their minds chiefly with taxation to meet the cost of a huge military establishment and with a heavy drain on the bread-winning manhood of the country. The war with Japan was utterly unpopular with them. They believed that it had been forced on Japan just as the autocratic institutions of Russia are forced upon her suffering people. On the other hand, they welcomed Japan's successes in the war because they regarded them as so many sledge-hammer blows to strike off the bureaucratic shackles from the feet of the Russian nation. Japan, in short, assumed in their eyes the character of a political deliverer, and were she now to stretch out her hands and endeavour to annex Siberia they would not make an effort to prevent her. Such are the sentiments attributed to the Liberals who, having been returned to the Duma by an overwhelming majority of the country's votes, are not unlikely to obtain partial or complete control of the Empire's foreign policy. It is to create in the minds of these Liberals a radically different estimate of Japan and to rouse in them an enthusiastic desire to defend and even extend their country's dominions in the Extreme East, that the Novoye Vremya and the Slavo have of late been publishing a series of articles intended to represent Japan in the most heinous light and to arouse profound indignation against her. In prosecuting that purpose, a thoroughly holy purpose according to the view of the Slavo and the Novoye Vremya, any and every weapon seems legitimate. A case has to be made out quite irrespectively of the truth and these two journals are doing what they can to manufacture it. That, in brief, is the explanation offered by the Fiji's St. Petersburg correspondent, who in turn claims to express the opinions of many intelligent Russians. It is an explanation plausible at least, but perhaps a trifle too ingenious.

KOREA.

Friday, June 1.

On the 21st of May a small party consisting of a Japanese police-sergeant with 5 Japanese constables and one Korean policeman, set out to reconnoitre Honju. Some hours after their departure the sound of firing was heard near the town, and it being conjectured that they had come into collision with the insurgents, a detachment was sent to their assistance. Nothing could be seen of them, however, and the fight seemed to have ended. Not until the 29th was anything known of the reconnoitering party. On that day four of the Japanese constables returned safely, but the sergeant, one constable and the Korean are still missing.

A telegram from the officer commanding the expedition sent against Honju was received in Seoul on the 31st of May at noon. What time the message was despatched seems to be a little uncertain, but we gather that it was the 30th. It said that Honju had then been completely invested; that the assault would be delivered at dawn on the 31st and that the force of the insurgents was known. A later message received by the Jiji Shimpō, shows that Captain Tanaka's force reached Honju on the 29th and devoted the following day to investing the walled town and occupying the outlying villages. On the 21st at dawn the attack was delivered. It resulted in the complete discomfiture of the insurgents. No particulars are given.

The Korean Government is reported to have decided on despatching a force of 250 troops to deal with the insurrection in Kyongsan-do. It is in Chhungchong-do that the Japanese force is operating.

A telegram to the Asahi from Antung reports that there is trouble on the upper waters of the Yalu, and that the insurgents have stolen a quantity of timber intended for Japanese military use.

Saturday, June 2.

Major Tanaka reports that at 1.30 a.m. on May 31st the troops under his command—two companies—having made their dispositions for the attack of Honju, he sent a messenger to summon the insurgents to surrender. They, however, declined to listen to overtures and the assault had to be delivered. Two of the gates were blown up with dynamite and after a somewhat protracted street fight the whole place fell into the hands of the Japanese by 7.30 a.m. The assailants had one man killed and two wounded, while the casualties on the side of the insurgents were 69 killed, and they lost 127 prisoners (including the wounded we presume). At the time of the despatch of the report further seizures were taking place. The insurgent leader, Ming Chyonsik, effected his escape. According to statements made by the prisoners, the insurgents numbered about one thousand. It was found that the sergeant of police and two others—one a Japanese constable the other a Korean—who were reported missing, had been seized by the insurgents and put to death.

Sunday, June 3.

The blow delivered to the insurgents at Honju on the 31st ultimo by Japanese troops appears to have been decisive. They were scattered to the four quarters and it is telegraphed that the small Japanese force will be immediately withdrawn to Seoul, leaving to gendarmes and police the duty of clearing up the debris.

We read in the Jiji Shimpō's telegraphic correspondence that the insurgents in the south of Chhungchhyong-do have inflicted about equal injury on Japanese subjects and Koreans. The 11 Chin-hoi have lost altogether 31 men, and have taken refuge in the mountains. In the north also of the same province there is disturbance. On the 29th ultimo a body of rioters attacked the local offices at Yongchihon and appropriated a sum of 2,700 yen in money, carrying off also chattels worth 900 yen and the wife of one of the local officials. Chhollado too is said to be disturbed, but it would appear that the most unquiet province of all is Kyongsangdo, where insurgents are reported to have made their appearance at no less than 5 places, namely, Andong, Chimpō, Yongyang, Nyonghai and Ponghwa. These Kyongsangdo malcontents have issued proclamations declaring that they will destroy any person who is found to have docked his top-knot and to be wearing his hair in foreign style. The well-to-do inhabitants are reported to be collecting their portable belongings and escaping as best they can, and it is alleged that this commotion is likely to resuscitate the conservative spirit as well as to cause much inconvenience to Japan's post-bellum enterprises. A few drastic object-lessons, such as that given at Honju, ought, however, to work effectually in the opposite direction. The Koreans themselves have sent a military force of 160 men to attack the insurgents at Andong.

Tuesday, June 5.

The insurgents who were recently driven out of Hongju, are reported to be concerting measures to recover possession of the place and the inhabitants being thrown into trepidation by the intelligence, troops have been sent out on all the roads to reconnoitre and to guard the approaches. There is talk of 150 insurgents having assembled at Chhungyang, where they are pillaging. The number of men killed at the assault on Hongju was 80. Their bodies have all been disposed of. The number of prisoners is 145, but there is much difficulty in obtaining any trustworthy information from them as they either conceal the truth or deliberately deceive. The leader Ming has escaped to Tokusan. These facts are taken from the official report of Major Tanaka who commanded the Japanese troops. From other sources we learn that Hongju seems to have been a kind of military depot. The spoils taken by the Japanese are given as 72 guns, 280 rifles, 340 gun-barrels, 257 lances, 71 swords, and small quantities of gunpowder and rice. The guns are said to have been utterly obsolete weapons, and out of the whole number not more than one or two could have been fired; while the ammunition is reported to have been manufactured in loco and to have been equally unserviceable. According to the Hochu Shimbun the insurgents did not number a thousand, or anything like a thousand. Rumour has been guilty of its usual exaggeration in this matter. Their force did not exceed 200, and they consisted chiefly of riff-raff together with some discharged soldiers. But it will be observed that this does not tally with Major Tanaka's report which shows that the killed and the prisoners totalled 225, and we must assume that at least an equal number escaped. Besides Major Tanaka says that there are 4 or 5 well-to-do men among the prisoners. Two Korean ex-instructors of police have been arrested in Seoul on suspicion of having relations with the insurgents.

The Residency-General is said to have intimated to the Korean Government that an indemnity will have to be paid to the family of the Japanese subject killed in Kyonsan-do, and on account of the Japanese Government's mine devastated by the insurgents in that district.

It has been decided that the Household Department will grant a site, 125 acres in extent, at Suwon for the establishment of a model farm.

Japanese journals announce the results of recent consultations as to the positions to be occupied by the Japanese garrison in Korea. Hamheung in Hamgyng-do will be the headquarters of the 13th Division, and Hoiryong the headquarters of a brigade of that Division. In Seoul and its vicinity the 15th Division's headquarters will be at Yongsan and the main body of its troops will be at Pyong-yang and Wiju. There are temporary arrangements so far as the quarters of the troops are concerned, for no barracks exist except at Gensan and Chempulpo, and it thus becomes necessary to divide the men into small parties and find lodging for them in Korean houses. Plans for barracks at Hamheung and Yongsan have been prepared and the work of building will be commenced, it is expected, during the course of the current year. According to the Portsmouth Treaty neither of the high contracting parties may post troops along the Russo-Korean frontier; that is to say, along the lower reaches of the Tumen River. Hamheung, which has been chosen for the headquarters of the 13th Division, is 270 miles from the Russian frontier and Hoiryong is 60 miles distant from it. The broad fact indicated by these dispositions is that the Japanese programme is to defend the approaches to Korea from the directions of the Yalu and the Tumen.

Wednesday, June 6.

There is a report that about a hundred insurgents have made their appearance at Thain in the province of Chollado, and two gendarmes with a small detachment of Japanese troops have been despatched from Kimju to deal with them. These insurgents have cut the telegraph between Kimju and Mokpho.

Orders have been issued that every possible effort should be made to arrest Ming Chongsik, the leader of the insurgents recently dispersed at Hongju. It will be remembered that Ming managed to effect his escape at the time of the Japanese assault.

Professor Shidehara, councillor to the Educational Section of the Residency-General, has resigned and his resignation has been accepted. It appears that his views as to education in Korea differ from those of Marquis Ito, and the difference being incapable of adjustment the Professor has given up his office. He will probably enter the Educational Department on his return to Tokyo.

A telegram from Hongju says that out of 145 Koreans made prisoners on the occasion of the recent assault, 60 have been released after examination. The remainder are still undergoing inquiry. Those against whom a clear case is established, will be sent to Seoul for trial by a military tribunal.

There appears to be some trouble between the Residency-General and the Korean Government with regard to the appointment of a new Minister by the latter. Communications are passing on the subject, and the acting Resident-General has asked for a tangible reply to his queries. We can not decipher clearly from the telegrams what the nature of the complication is.

Thursday, June 7.

Further disturbances are reported, this time from Kangwondo. On the 2nd instant 60 of the Wi Pyon appeared in that region and were menacing Kangneung at the time of the dispatch of telegrams. Also at Ulju in the same region 150 insurgents attacked the offices of the local government, burned them and then headed for Kangneung, thus suggesting that they were operating in conjunction with the Wi Pyon. There were thirteen Japanese subjects in Ulju at the time of the disturbance, and they escaped to Kangneung. Further, a message from Seoul (Jiji Shimpo) reports that according to news from Chonju two of the leaders of the insurgents who were dispersed at Hongju are now in Thalin at the head of a force.

Mr. Hulbert has returned to Seoul after his abortive attempt to preach an anti-Japanese propaganda in the United States.

It appears that Sergeant Hijikata did not die by the hand of the insurgents. In attempting to reconnoitre Hongju when the disturbance first broke out there; he received a wound in the left leg, and being completely disable, he committed suicide.

Surgeon-General Sato has been ordered by the Mikado to proceed to Korea. His mission is to establish really well-equipped hospitals in that country, and to endeavour to wean the Imperial Court from its superstitious belief in old-fashioned nostrums and charms. General Sato goes as an official of the Japanese Household Department. He is a man of every high reputation, and his advice ought to carry corresponding weight in Korea.

TALIEH AND LIAOTUNG

As might have been expected Liaotung will not immediately be able to pay its own expenses. Mr. Shimamura, an official of the Civil Government, has arrived in Tokyo with a plan which the Central Government is asked to sanction. It involves a loan of 2,600,000 yen to be spread over 3 years; namely, one million in 1907; one million in 1908, and 600,000 in 1909. The debt is to lie for two years unredeemed, and is to be paid off thereafter in 7 years as follows:—

1913 .....	200,000
1914 .....	300,000
1915 .....	400,000
1916 .....	500,000
1917 .....	500,000
1918 .....	600,000

The sources of revenue derived from the district are as present:—

	Yen.
Land Tax .....	104,138
Salt Tax .....	46,690
Miscellaneous Taxes .....	65,008
Water Works .....	70,096
Leases of Government Lands and Buildings .....	231,864

Total .....

In addition to the above the following items appear:—

	Yen.
Revenue from Government Undertakings .....	241,146
Miscellaneous Revenue .....	72,134
Fees .....	24,866
Extraordinary Revenue .....	120,000

Total .....

Grand Total .....

Apparently the earnings of the railway are not included in this estimate, and as no account of contemplated expenditures is given, the impression produced is not very clear. Meanwhile the rumour that Talien is to be a free port is confirmed, and it is added that the only charge will be a tonnage duty of 5 sen per ton for vessels using the Government wharf. This was placed at the disposal of ordinary steamers from the 20th of May, having been previously used for official purposes only. The railway, however, does not yet communicate with the wharf, so that the facilities afforded by the latter for landing goods are not conspicuous at present. The Asahi Shimbun advises that Talien should be made not only a free port but an independent municipal government, and that all the buildings now officially owned there should be handed over to the municipality. Our contemporary thinks that by no other means can this place—which it calls a "demon's carcass"—be endued with real vitality.

The Japanese Customs Dues Investigation Committee is said to have decided that Talien shall be a free port. Apparently this decision is to extend to all the ports along the Liaotung coast, excluding Port Arthur. The customs revenue derived at these ports during 1905 was only some thirteen thousand yen, but of course as a state of war existed until the late autumn of that year, trade was virtually non-existent. Whatever the future revenue might have become, however, the Japanese are reported to have resolved on abandoning it and making Talien free. This will be a serious blow to Newchwang, which must find the competition of Talien very formidable under such circumstances. It will have been observed that the merchants of Vladivostok are agitating vehemently to have that place declared a free port, and possibly the resolve now attributed to the Japanese Committee may have been influenced by a prospect of these merchants' success. It was predicted of the Russians some time ago that they intended to close the East-Chinese Railway between Harbin and Changchun and thus to make Vladivostok perforce the sole terminus of the Trans-Asian line. That they could legitimately take such a step in the face of their treaty engagements seems more than doubtful, for the Portsmouth Convention provides that "the Imperial Governments of Japan and Russia, with a view to promote and facilitate intercourse and traffic, will, as soon as possible, conclude a separate convention for the regulation of their connecting railway services in Manchuria." This article makes it constructively evident that the connexion must be preserved, and it is not to be supposed that Russia, in the face of such an agreement, will take any step to isolate the Japanese section of the line. Talien and Vladivostok will have to compete fairly for the Trans-Asian traffic, and the natural advantages of the former port should secure the victory for it, even though Vladivostok be declared free.

Mr. Yamaza of the Foreign Office and Major-General Fukushima are to be sent to China on a special mission. They are understood to have general instructions to arrange for carrying out the decisions arrived at by the council of statesmen held in Tokyo on the 22nd of May with regard to Manchuria. In other words, they will arrange for exchanging Japanese military government for Chinese civil administration as soon as possible without regard to the dates conventionally fixed. They will also discuss the question of sanitary arrangements. Another function entrusted to them has reference to Tairen. This, as our readers know, is to be made a free port. But not a free port in the sense that merchandise destined for any part of Manchuria will be admitted without payment of duties. Such a system would be a violation of China's sovereign rights. Japan may duly declare Dalny free so far as concerns imports destined for Liaotung, which is under her own control, but beyond that region China's jurisdiction commences and duties will be levied. The question then is, what machinery should be organized for levying them—a custom house at Wafangtien; or customs offices at every station along the line; or a custom house at Dalny itself where Japanese officials would collect the dues on account of the Chinese, as is done by the Germans at Tsingtao. This last plan is said to be most in favour.

JAPANESE CONNEXION WITH THE CHINESE NEWSPAPER PRESS.

In the body of a long and very able telegraphic resumé of the condition of China, sent to The Times on April 20th by its Peking correspondent, there occurs the following:—

While the attitude of the Government shows no sympathy with any anti-foreign movement, it would be idle to deny that some features of the present situation are most unsatisfactory. Foremost is the unbridled nature of the newborn native Press, the journals of which are mostly published in the treaty ports and guided largely by students with a smattering of education from Japan, assisted by irresponsible Japanese. Several of the worst inflammatory papers are registered under Japanese protection. There is an urgent necessity that England should concert with Japan to assist China to draft and enforce Press laws. Not all the papers, however, are bad. Some are good and have had a beneficial effect in contributing to the growth of a reasonable public opinion, but the general tone is anti-foreign, and even the best are remarkably inaccurate. The publication in the native papers of the anti-slavery South African election charges has had a deplorable effect, while the publication of English cartoons, showing Chinese driven with whips in chains to labour, Englishmen shooting runaway Chinese in sport, and Englishmen torturing Chinese at the mines, can only make Englishmen living in China wonder why retaliation is so infrequent.

It is necessary to make a comment on the statement that "several of the worst inflammatory papers are registered under Japanese protection." The fact itself is doubtless correct but the inference it suggests is misleading. We may confidently assert that almost without exception the Japanese subjects who lend their names to Chinese proprietors and editors of newspapers take no interest whatever in their contents, probably have no knowledge of them and certainly do not in any way influence them. Their nominal connexion with these journals is merely an expedient to secure immunity from administrative restraint, just as in former years the papers published in Japan used to have a dummy editor who suffered in his own person, for a consideration, the legal pains and penalties which would otherwise have fallen upon the heads of the real editor and publisher. The dummy editor was absolutely innocent of any participation in the composition of the journal he represented: usually an illiterate man, he had no capacity to participate. So too, in all probability, the Japanese subjects registered as proprietors of Chinese newspapers are ignorant of the Chinese language and never attempt to read the contents of journals printed in that language, still less to compose or inspire them. What they do is to act as figure-heads and thus to insure to the real editor and printer the licence of consular jurisdiction. It would be advantageous to all parties, we think, to act as the British Representative in Japan acted 30 years ago, namely, to interdict all publication of newspapers in the names of foreign subjects or citizens.

THE NIPPON YUSEN KAISHA.

The speech delivered by Mr. Kondo Rempei, President of the Nippon Yusen Kaisha, at the Company's recent general meeting was as follows:—

"Gentlemen, as the report now in your hands shows, the results of this half-year's working have been good and we are enabled to propose a better rate of dividend than that of the previous term. These facts afford the directors much pleasure and will doubtless be viewed by you with satisfaction.

The explanation of this term's favourable results is that a large number of the steamers belonging to the Company as well as other vessels were engaged in transporting the troops from the seat of war, few being released from the public service. On the other hand there was a brisk revival of trade owing to the restoration of peace, and the movement of merchandise and passengers having consequently been large, we were enabled to employ 30 chartered vessels in addition to those released from the service of the State, our returns and profits being correspondingly satisfactory. Nevertheless we can not anticipate similarly good results in our next term, for the Japanese and foreign ships employed by the Government have all been released and have resumed their ordinary business, which means that competition, with its inevitable concomitant, reduction of rates, has to be encountered and our incomings can not fail to be affected. We must be prepared for this.

Two years and three months elapsed from the outbreak of the war to the end of the term under review and the long period of state transport-service having been in the main concluded by the close of the term, our company was enabled to lay down the heavy burden borne by it throughout the struggle. We have to congratulate ourselves on the fact that with the exception of vessels sunk by the enemy or used for the purpose of blocking Port Arthur, not one ship belonging to this Company went to the bottom, and the transport duties entrusted to us were discharged without any serious accident.

A moment's reflection shows that the war now happily terminated was one that concerned the existence of our country. It was of unprecedented magnitude, incomparably larger than the struggle with China ten years previously. Provision for military transport must necessarily proceed pari passu with the growth of the army and navy; as the latter assume large dimensions, so also must the former. Without such provision of transport facilities, though the navy were never so competent, the army never so indomitable, they would have lacked, as it were, feet and hands, so that the one could not have taken the initiative and carried its banners into far Manchuria nor could the other have won the mastery of the seas. No arguments are needed to demonstrate the vital importance of the mechanism of transport for warlike purposes, and we must recognise the very grave nature of the responsibilities which thus devolve on this Company. How to discharge these responsibilities without error, how to insure the conduct of the war, against mishap—these were questions which, as they pressed for solution, made us feel that we too stood in the strategical arena. Waking or sleeping, the longing to avoid error was ever present, and when we rejoice for our country's sake that everything passed without mishap and that our victorious troops have been safely carried home, we may also fairly congratulate our Company.

For purposes of comparison I will state the records of the recent war and of that with China so far as concerns the use of the Company's vessels for transport purposes. During the war just ended our ships carried 1,270,000 men of all ranks, 124,000 horses and about 1,860,000 tons of material. During the war with China they carried 520,000 men, 40,000 horses and 320,000 tons of material. Thus as between the two wars there was a difference of 750,000 men, 84,000 horses and 1,540,000 tons. As to the number of our ships employed, they were 75 in the recent war, with an aggregate displacement of 250,000 tons, against 55 in the China-Japan war with a displacement of 99,000 tons, which last figure does not amount to the total tonnage of one half of our present fleet. Further, in the China war the largest of our ships did not exceed 3,000 tons, whereas in the last war we had 17 vessels of 6,000 tons and over, their total displacement being 106,000 tons. These 17 steamers were all of similar form and equal speed, and being thus capable of carrying at one time a large force of men and a great quantity of war material, it is unquestionable that they afforded signal facilities in the conduct of the campaign. Indeed had these 17 vessels been removed from the fleet of transports, it may well be doubted whether the conveyance of the troops and stores could have been managed satisfactorily. Happily at that great crisis we were able to place at the service of the State these homogeneous vessels. The company may congratulate itself that it thus succeeded in discharging, to some small extent, its duties and responsibilities to the Empire and that, by acting as the Navy's assistant and as the Army's hands and feet, it achieved the constant purpose of its existence.

In thus speaking I may seem to suggest that our ships worked of themselves and that their machinery moved of its own accord. Nothing is further from my purpose. If success is to be achieved, there have to be competent crews to operate the steamers, and there has to be suitable machinery on land to connect with them. It may be truly said of the Company's employees ashore and afloat that they conscientiously obeyed instructions and discharged their functions unflinchingly, assiduously and diligently. In the China-Japan war the Company's staff ashore and afloat totalled 1,155 men, and it now aggregates 1,389; an increase of only 20 per cent., though during the decade that separates then and now, the tonnage of our fleet and the duties to be discharged in connection with it have developed very largely. The Company should not forget, the country should not forget, how diligently the members of our staff and the officers and crews of our ships worked to bring about the fortunate results that stand on record.

Peace has now been restored and trade has entered upon a period of development. In unison with these changes, our Company is energetically resuming its former services, opening new ones wherever necessary and improving its fleet. For example, we have established lines of steamers between Bankok and Hongkong and between Japan and Talien and we are taking measures to increase the vessels employed upon our former lines. Thus for our European Service we have ordered six new vessels of 8,300 tons each and we are adopting measures to keep abreast of the progress of the times. But it is to be observed that a great addition has been made to the domestic mercantile marine, while in foreign waters we have to face new and formidable rivals between Europe and the Far East and between Shanghai and Yokohama. The business of marine transport is indeed a formidable enterprise, and it behoves our Company to maintain a careful attitude while exerting itself in every way to meet its competitors at home and abroad."

The business report of the Nippon Yusen Kaisha for the half year ended March 31st, 1906, shows that the Company received the order to hold its ships in readiness for the service of the State on the 31st of December, 1903, and that by May, 1904 almost all its vessels were in use by the Army and the Navy. Including 2 vessels taken up by the Red Cross Society, the number of ships thus employed was 71 and their tonnage aggregated 252,102 tons. By June of that year, the Company's ships lost in the war totalled eleven, representing 32,372 tons, and there remained 60 vessels, more or less, discharging public functions. On the conclusion of peace in 1905 all those requisitioned by the Navy were at once released, but many were retained by the Army until March of the following year for the purpose of carrying back the troops.

The steamers used by the Army totalled 67 with a displacement of 272,119 tons, and their disposition was 57 transports, 3 despatch-vessels, one salvage vessel, and 6 hospital ships, in addition to 2 belonging to the Red Cross Society. The transports carried a million and a quarter of men in all, 120,000 horses and a million tons of stores as well as about 4,000 cases of special articles. The most remarkable feature in this fleet of ships was a squadron of 17 homogeneous steamers belonging to the Nippon Yusen Kaisha, all of nearly the same size (6,000 tons) and the same speed. It was by this squadron that whole armies were transported at one time to Liaotung, to Northern Korea and to Saghalien, and on their return journeys they served as hospital ships.

The steamers used by the Navy totalled 42 with a displacement of 125,327 tons. Their division was, auxiliary cruisers (the Nikko, Kasuga, Kumano, Yawata, Bingo, Sado and Shinano); armed-transports 2; water-supply ships 3; transports 20; despatch boats 3; look-out ships 2; repair-ship 1; torpedo-laying vessel 1; hospital-ships 2, and salvage ship 1.

It will be observed that the above numbers of ships and their tonnage do not, apparently tally with the numbers and tonnage stated in the President's speech. Mr. Kondo spoke of 71 vessels with an aggregate displacement of 250,000 tons, whereas this business report shows 67 vessels in the service of the Army and 42 in the service of the Navy, or 109 in all, with a total tonnage of 397,446. The explanation is that some of the Company's ships were on duty with both the Army and the Navy, and are thus duplicated in the record.

The report goes on to say that though this large number of steamers constantly discharged onerous duties during a space of two years and three months, not a ship, man or horse was lost by accident at sea. Navigating the high seas in all weathers, often in the face of the enemy, they transported over a million men with all their provisions and equipment, and no mishap due to carelessness or incompetence mars the record.

Eloquent reference is made also to the fact that non-combatant officers and seamen in the service of the Company were occasionally exposed to the enemy's fire, and some lost their lives while others were carried as prisoners to foreign lands.

HALF-GODS.

For thee I cast my gods away,
And wandered on these paths alone.
For having seen thee could I stay
And worship at my gods of stone?

And I have followed on, and on;
Upward, towards the sunset glow,
Tracing the way that thou hast gone,
Daring to go where thou would'st go.

But now since darkness falls o'er me,
And thou and they alike seem far,
I sit and dream if bright stars be Still shining where my half-gods are.

And yet I would not have thee turn,
Or pause one moment on the road.
And so I wait.—What if I learn
In losing thee—that I find God?

M. K.

The steamer Edo Maru (3,000 gross tons) went ashore on June 6th in the neighbourhood of Mutsure island. Measures for floating her are being carried out.

THE BATTLE IN THE SEA OF JAPAN.

It will be many a year before public interest in this memorable battle fades. In connexion with the anniversary of the event, as recently celebrated at the Naval Club in Tokyo, the Fiji Shimpō interviewed Captain Akiyama, who at the time of the battle was serving on Admiral Togo's staff. Our contemporary's verbatim reproduction of the Captain's statement is this:—"Our most anxious time was the two or three days immediately previous to the battle. It might reasonably have been expected that the enemy would come to the Tsushima Strait, and Admiral Togo, who had entire confidence in his own judgment, took that view. Yet, considering the various reports that reached us, the Russian squadron should have been sighted by our lookout vessels by the 23rd at soonest and the 25th at latest, nevertheless there was no intelligence of it. We then began to doubt whether it might not have gone round by the Soya or the Tsugaru Strait. Of course had it taken the northern route there were preparations for its reception there, yet so long as its whereabouts remained uncertain we were anxious. Even our Admiral, who generally had such confidence in himself, showed signs of uneasiness. At last on the afternoon of the 25th news was flashed to us that some of the enemy's vessels had reached Woosung and then for the first time we felt quite easy."

* * * The fiercest phase of the battle did not last more than 40 minutes: from half-past two in the afternoon until 10 minutes past three. It would be impossible to convey any idea either by speech or by pen of what happened in those 40 minutes. The number of shots fired by the two squadrons reached 2,000 or more a minute, and under their impact the sea seemed to boil. Hundreds of columns of water were thrown up and descended in cascades. Even Admiral Togo was two or three times drenched from head to foot. Looking at the enemy's fleet from our direction, his five or six leading vessels were seen to be enveloped in clouds of black smoke and columns of water. When these were dissipated by the wind, the Oslabya had disappeared, and only the hull of the Sivarov remained, her two funnels and her two masts having been cut off close to the deck. The Alexander III, and the Orel were enveloped in flames. One could not but feel sorry for them as one looked. At two minutes past three o'clock the Oslabya went to the bottom. The injuries that our ships also had suffered by that time were by no means small. Virtually all had been inflicted in those 40 minutes. The flagship Mikasa had her stern-mast cut in two midway. Admiral Togo's pennant was flying from it. The ship's flag too was half shot away, and the halyards and rigging were hanging in rags. The vessel had also received several shot in her hull, and had over 100 killed and wounded. Moreover the Shikishima, the Fuji, the Kasuga, the Nisshin, the Idzumo and the Adzuma were all more or less hurt. Some were seen to have had gunshattered and others had their bulwarks smashed. The Asama was hit several times astern, and one of her propellers being injured, she lost her speed and fell far behind the fighting line, being thus for a time entirely without support. In this situation she received the concentrated fire of several of the ships in the rear of the enemy's squadron, but she succeeded at last in fighting her way back to the line. She was in no small danger for a time, however. The issue of the battle of the Sea of Japan was decided in this interval of 40 minutes. Thereafter it was only a question of pursuing. * * * What gave us comparatively the greatest trouble was dealing with Admiral Nebogatoff's surrendered vessels and bringing them into port. As a general rule ships that haul down their colours are blown up before the enemy can get possession of them, and we were not a little anxious on that score. Nebogatoff has been blamed by the public but we who witnessed the actual state of affairs could not but sympathise with him. His vessels were merely fighting ships in appearance. Their crews were completely exhausted by the conflict of the preceding day and night. They had received terrible injury, and that they had lost their fighting capacity all who saw the Orel after the battle must agree. Had this remnant of disabled vessels ventured to engage our fleet, which was in full fighting trim, their sinking would have been a matter of a few minutes. The Russian Admiral would merely have condemned a large number of officers and men to death. Would it have been humane to choose such a course? * * * Captain Yamamoto and I went to the Nicholas I and urged her people to proceed to the Mikasa. But Admiral Nebogatoff asked for time to bury his dead. He dressed in full uniform and came on deck, where he performed this last sad rite. Then he collected the officers and men and with hot tears rolling down his face, bade them farewell in a long speech. I that looked on could not but feel for him and was barely able to suppress my tears. * * * One-third of the officers and men were transferred to our squadron and the rest were left on board the surrendered ships, which were brought to port with the greatest care and anxiety. I believe, all things considered, that Nebogatoff's surrender was unavoidable."

GERMAN MARITIME INTERESTS.

The Times of April 23rd contains a highly interesting article on the development of German maritime interests. It appears that at the close of 1905 the German Ministry of Marine compiled for presentation to the Reichstag a voluminous document on this subject. The document shows that there has been a "prodigious growth of German maritime interests in recent years. One fact alone suffices to prove this, namely, that between 1894 and 1904 the total value of the Empire's foreign trade rose from 3,650 millions of yen (taking 10 yen to the £) to 6,100 millions. An important feature is disclosed by analysing this total, namely, that Germany, if she had to war with England, would lose nearly one quarter of her maritime trade at a single stroke, and that, were she worsted at sea, "she would lose very nearly the whole of the remainder and would have to depend almost entirely for the supply of imported food and raw materials and for the disposal abroad of her manufactured products on her overland trade, which amounts to only 1,837 millions of yen out of a total trade of 6,100 millions." We can not be surprised that in the face of these facts the German Government is straining every nerve to acquire a navy sufficiently strong to guarantee the safety of this over-sea commerce in any emergency. The document tabulates for purposes of comparison the expenditures in millions of marks of the five great maritime Powers of the Occident on their navies at an interval of a decade:—

Great Britain.....	291	734
France.....	203	251
Russia.....	110	254
United States.....	128	349
Germany.....	81	210

Another table may be re-produced. It shows the comparative strength for 1905 of the several maritime States in battle-ships launched since 1881 and cruisers of 5,000 tons and over launched since 1886:—

Country.	Total Number of Vessels	Tonnage displacement.	Ready. Number of Vessels	Tonnage displacement.	Building Number of Vessels	Tonnage displacement.
Battle-ships—
Great Britain.....	66	909,280	60	807,914	6	101,366

United States.....	29	387,754	16	182,232	13	205,522
Germany.....	25	292,231	20	236,831	5	66,000

Germany.....	14	114,596	12	91,396	2	23,200
Italy.....	7	54,980	5	35,320	2	19,660

Commenting on the above table The Times says:—

Some exception may be taken to these figures from several points of view. For example, since the date taken for the earliest battleships enumerated is 1881, it is evident that the numbers given must include many battleships which, if not quite obsolete for all fighting purposes whatever, are at any rate quite incapable of being placed in the first fighting line. A line drawn at the date at which no ships are either obsolete or obsolescent in this sense would certainly modify in one direction or the other the relative strength of the several Powers enumerated in the table. Again, since the date is 1905 and data from which the table is prepared were probably anterior to the overthrow of the Russian navy by Japan, it is manifest that the figures relating to Russia and Japan no longer represent the existing situation even approximately. But the table is open to a still more serious criticism than these. So far as we can judge from public sources of information, it would seem that, in its anxiety to make the strength of the German navy even less than it really is, and thereby to enforce its demand for a still larger provision in the future, the German Admiralty has to some extent, slight perhaps but not wholly insignificant, manipulated the figures in its own favour. The number of available British battleships can be made up to 60 only by including the Hero, Conqueror, Colossus, and Edinburgh, the two former of which have practically gone to the scrapheap, while the two latter will probably not be long in following them. On the other hand, the number of available German battleships only can, it would seem, be brought down to 20 by excluding eight third-class battleships of the Siegfried class, which can hardly be considered entirely obsolete, since they were lengthened and reconstructed in 1903. Further, unless we are mistaken, the total of battleships for the United States should be 26, not 29, and the numbers of cruisers are also somewhat overstated as regards countries other than Germany. However, we need not seriously complain of this rather transparent device for promoting the desired increase of the German navy, since, even when due allowance is made for the errors and misstatements above mentioned, the overwhelming superiority of British naval strength to that of Germany alone remains uncontested. Not only are the numbers in both classes of ships far greater, but the disproportion to tonnage is even more significant. Whatever other inferences favourable or unfavourable may be drawn from the statement of the German Admiralty, one inference at any rate is irresistible, and that is, that not only is Germany alone no match for England at sea, but that consequently, the whole of the vast and growing maritime commerce of Germany would be at the mercy of this country if war unhappily broke out between them.

The mishap to the Donegal, whilst outward bound to join the China Squadron, has suggested, says an exchange, the advisability to divide the compass card into 360 deg., and abolish the distinctions of N.S.E.W. A course zero would be due N.; 45 deg., N.E.; 90 deg., E.; 180 deg., S., and so on. This would do away effectually with clerical errors.

TOKYO ELECTRIC RAILWAYS.

For some time steps pointing to the amalgamation of the three urban electric tramways of Tokyo have been in progress, namely, the Densha, the Shigai and the Denki companies. There can not be the smallest doubt that from the point of view of public convenience, not to speak of economy of management, the amalgamation scheme would prove of incalculable benefit. A sense of this fact has been growing for a considerable period, and was accentuated by the recent failure to obtain official permission for an increase of the absurdly inadequate three-farthings fare to which the three companies find themselves condemned owing to the unwise machinations of Mr. Amenoniya. The ablest men on the three boards of directors have taken frequent counsel, and finally it has been found possible to invite meetings of the principal shareholders for the purpose of expressing a preliminary opinion as to the merits and feasibility of amalgamation. These meetings took place on the afternoon of the 5th instant. That of the Shigai was signalized by an attitude of warm advocacy on the part of Messrs. Amenoniya and Okura Kihachiro, who, from their previous support of the three farthings fare, might have been expected to adopt a different line. In the brief space of 10 minutes the shareholders present voted in favour of amalgamation. At the meeting of the Denki shareholders there was less unanimity. Mr. Takagi, a well-known barrister, argued that there was no pressing necessity for immediate amalgamation, considering that it would involve sacrifices on the part of the Company and considering that the manifest weakness of the Governmental authorities made it quite uncertain as to what attitude they would assume towards the slight increase of fare which formed a part of the scheme. On hearing the full explanations offered by the Directors, however, Mr. Takagi withdrew his objection, and a unanimous decision was adopted in favour of amalgamation. The Densha Company's meeting, however, did not show such marked approval. This is the only one of the three companies which can earn even a moderately good dividend with existing rates, and the thing is accomplished by crowding the cars to an extent that would not be permitted in any other country and by using a road bed which does not satisfy the conditions required in the case of other companies. The Densha shareholders did not, however, oppose union. They merely decided that in view of the importance of the measure very full investigation was essential, and they consequently appointed a committee for that purpose. Baron Shibusawa and Mr. Makoshi agreed to act as arbitrators. Mr. Masuda Ko was also asked but he declined. The first decision of the arbitrators related to the most vital point of all, namely, the redistribution of the shares. This question was decided as follows:—The shares of the three companies now aggregate 570,000, and are divided in the proportion, Denki Tetsudo, 120,000; Shigai Tetsudo 300,000, and Densha Tetsudo 120,000. For purposes of amalgamation 30,000 of the Denki shares will be taken, and handed over to the other two companies, the Shigai receiving 12,000 and the Densha 18,000. Thus in the amalgamated concern the three companies will be represented by Denki 90,000, Shigai 312,000 and Densha 138,000. It may well be supposed that this matter gave rise to much discussion. It is, in fact, the crux of the situation. Originally the Shigai and the Densha required that the Denki should surrender 36,000 shares, whereas the Denki declined to surrender more than 24,000. The arbitrators took the middle course of indicating 30,000. Then there was a divergence of views between the Shigai and the Densha, the former claiming that it should receive one half of the shares surrendered by the Denki whereas the Densha asked for two-thirds. Again the arbitrators took the middle line and divided these shares in the ratio of 4 to 6. Of course it will be necessary that the shares of each company should be fully paid up for the purpose of this junction. This will involve payments of 1,040,000 yen by the Denki, 6,000,000 by the Shigai and 500,000 by the Densha, or 7,540,000 yen in all.

MILITARY AND NAVAL REWARDS.

The Government has announced that payments of rewards to the officers and men engaged in the recent war will be made by means of loan bonds bearing five per-cent. interest and reckoned at a face-value of 95. This declaration is very severely condemned by the Fiji Shimpō, which thinks that such a face-value is practically fictitious. Five per cent. bonds can not be said to command that price even at present, when the money market is abnormally easy and large sums are seeking investment. How much more unreasonable then will the figure become when, as is certain to be the case by and bye, the spirit of enterprise revives and capital is in keen request? The rewards given to the country's troops and sailors are in many instances intended for the support of the recipients, who have been maimed or otherwise injured in fighting for Japan. Such persons must sell the bonds in order to carry out the purpose of the grant, and they will have to sell them at a loss likely to be aggravated by the appearance of these securities in the market. The nation does not want the Government to economise in a matter of this kind. That is the Fiji's view, and a fine broad-minded view it appears to be. There is just one thing to be said on the other side. It is that the unloading of a quantity of loan-bonds is not to be desired, and would certainly be encouraged if the bonds were issued at a price lower than their selling value. There is no very obvious reason why recipients of bonds should sell them in order to invest the money elsewhere as a means of livelihood. By retaining the bonds their holders will receive interest at the rate of 5.55 per cent., and will also have a yearly chance of getting them redeemed at par. That should be a sufficiently good investment for most people. At all events if the bonds were issued to the Army or the Navy, at a figure below their market price, there would be a corresponding temptation to realize them without delay, and the whole, or nearly the whole might be suddenly placed on the market. It should be the Government's desire to prevent that alike for the sake of the country's finance and for the sake of the holders themselves.

THE TOKYO CHAMBER OF COMMERCE AND FOREIGN TOURISTS.

The Tokyo Chamber of Commerce has appointed a committee to investigate the question of extending the hotel accommodation in the capital and providing generally for the convenience of tourists. This looks as though we may expect a new hotel to be built on a scale much more pretentious than that of any existing hotel. Nothing more is heard of the recently mooted scheme of handing over the Noshomusho building for conversion into a hotel. We can not think it a good scheme. A hotel must be specially designed. The common idea that any building whatever may be made to suit the purpose is altogether erroneous: it is to be placed in the same category with the notion that a Japanese is competent to run a hotel in foreign style. The Japanese are very clever, and when we allege that they have not yet displayed the special abilities that qualify people to manage a hotel in European style, we merely say of them what must be said of many other nationals. It is universally acknowledged that only one or two Western countries produce clever hotel-keepers, so the Japanese may be quite content to be classed with the majority. They know well how to run inns after their own country's fashion, but that is a very different thing from running a foreign inn, and just as they would laugh at any foreigner who attempted to manage a yadoya or a chaya, so they themselves must expect to be ridiculed if they attempt to run a hotel, for the present at all events. Should the committee of the Chamber of Commerce decide, as it probably will, that increased hotel accommodation is needed, we venture to suggest that, instead of attempting to adopt a building erected originally for a government office or some equally dissimilar purpose, an edifice should be planned and erected in strict conformity with the most modern conventions as to hotel accommodation, and that a Swiss of well established reputation should be appointed to manage it. There is no reason why Tokyo should not have the model hotel of the East. Such an enterprise would pay. But if a patched, reconstructed make-shift of an edifice be chosen, and if it be placed in incompetent hands, it will be a perpetual source of loss to its owners.

RUSSIAN RAILWAY ENTERPRISE.

A traveller who has just returned from Kulong and Kiatka and who is quoted by the Peking correspondent of the Asahi Shimbun, gives an account of Russian enterprise in that quarter of Asia. He says that a railway between Kulong and Kiatka would have been constructed last year had not the war interfered with the project. The line will now be actively pushed. It is a branch of the Trans-Asian Railway and Russian surveyors have found a satisfactory route. The same informant alleges that in anticipation of an influx of Japanese subjects when Kulong is opened the Russians are buying up all the available land there, and that they have a large force of troops at Kulong whose presence naturally produces much effect on the Chinese. He speaks of a division but it seems scarcely credible that Russia should have a force of such magnitude at Kulong unless she has diverted thither some of the troops originally massed at Harbin. The Chinese local officials are all mere puppets of the Russians, we read. There are 600 Russian settlers in Kulong. They have assayed to work about 10 gold-mines between that place and Kiatka, but in every instance the attempt proved a failure. In this context we may quote an application said to have been made by the Russian Minister in Peking to the Chinese Government, in the sense that as the Russian Authorities propose to establish a consulate at Uriastai, it is desirable to bring that place into direct communication with the home country. Hence the Minister asks that a concession be granted for constructing a Russian line of telegraph from Uriastai to Kulong, or that the enterprise be permitted to a combination of Russian and Chinese capitalists.

NOTES ON CURRENT EVENTS.

On the 1st instant (Jiji Shimpō's telegrams) the Japanese Chargé d'Affaires in Peking proceeded to the Waiwupu and informed Mr. Tang Shaoi that the process of evacuation indicated in the Fukushima-Ovanovsky Convention had been carried out by the Japanese forces as far as the line from Faku-man on the west through Tiehling to Fushun. It was therefore competent for China to send troops for the protection of the regions northward of that line within the limits of Japan's previous occupation, but inasmuch as Japanese soldiers would be found guarding the railway, it was to be desired that the Chinese troops should avoid collisions with them. Mr. Tang is said to have expressed much satisfaction on behalf of his country with regard to the course Japan is pursuing. As a matter of fact Japan had withdrawn all her military war establishment by the end of March, but she is evidently determined to carry out the letter of the convention and she has done so to a day, for the convention named the 1st of June as the date when her forces should be withdrawn to the south of the above-mentioned line. Russia, on her side, was bound by the same convention to retire northward to the line from Sanchingtsz via Kung-chuling to Itungchow. It would appear that she is fulfilling her engagement, for the railroad from Changtu as far as Kunchuling was to be handed over by her on the 1st instant. As yet no telegraphic news of the transfer has been received—or, at any rate, published—but there is no reason whatever to anticipate any want of faith. The next move in the programme of evacuation will be consummated on August 1st, by which time Russia is pledged to have withdrawn to the Sankiatz-Changchun-Palipao line, and Japan to the Hsimmintun-Mukden-Fushun line. It will be observed that Fushun is the pivot of Japan's two movements. After August there is no definition of localities: the numerical programme alone is to be taken as guide, namely, that by April 15th 1906, neither Empire must have more than 250,000 men in Manchuria; by October 15th of the same year, not more than 75,000, and by April 15th of 1907, the whole of both armies must be withdrawn with the exception of railway guards, namely, 15 men per kilometer. It may be noted here that since the railway measures 455 miles from Changchun to Port Arthur, the guards which Japan is entitled to post must not exceed 10,970 men; one Division, in fact.

It is satisfactory to observe from an article in the Chuo Shimbun that Japanese public opinion is tending to approve the 4 ft. 8½ inch gage for the Liaotung-Changchun Railway. This subject of gage has caused some discussion. Our readers are aware that the original 5-foot gage adopted by Russia for her Trans-Asian road was converted by the Japanese into the narrow gage of their own roads, not because they preferred the latter theoretically but because, when they obtained possession of the Russian line during the war, they did not capture the rolling stock and were consequently obliged to use their own locomotives and waggon.

That, however, was a temporary expedient. What they have now to consider is whether they will retain the narrow gage, or whether they will revert to the Russian gage, or whether they will adopt the 4 ft. 8½ inch gage. The first plan finds some advocates inasmuch as a sum of 30 or 40 million yen would be saved. But against that trifling gain has to be set the fatal objection that the Talien-Changchun section would thus be segregated alike from the Russian, the Chinese and the Korean systems. Again, reversion to the Russian gage would mean the sacrifice of local convenience to the facilities of the Trans-Asian traffic, an unwise course as it is upon the development of Manchurian and Chinese trade that the future of the line really depends. The Korean gage is 4 ft. 8½ inches; so is the Chinese, and so also will be the permanent way from Antung to Mukden. It seems quite plain, therefore, that Japan's wisest course will be to convert the Talien-Changchun line into the 4 ft. 8½ inch. So far as the Trans-Asian traffic is concerned, the connexions can be made at Changchun without much inconvenience.

The terrible act of self-destruction recently perpetrated by a youth of high standing and good education who threw himself into the crater of Aso has found an imitator. On the 21st of April a young man, aged 12 Amano Kotaro by name, disappeared from his parents' house at Hamamatsu in Shizuoka, and on the 24th a letter bearing the Tokyo post-mark reached his home. It said:—"For months I have been suffering from a feeling of despair which now drives me from home and impels me to throw myself into the crater of vehement Asama, thus winning a splendid death and ascending with the mountain's smoke to a lofty life above the sky. Ah! when this letter reaches you, I shall already have been transformed into a puff of smoke, and when I think of it * * * (these asterisks appear in the original.) Yet if up to the moment of death I have been able to talk and laugh as usual, is it not a sign that my heart is at ease? I have an assured hope or I would not take this step. My farewell to the life of the world is spoken in this my last testament. Let no search be made for my body." The letter appeared to have been written at Shimabashi for the post-mark bore that name. Probably the writer went on at once to Uyeno and took train for Utsunomiya. His parents immediately communicated with the police but nothing has yet been discovered as to his fate. There is no apparent reason why anything should be discovered unless he repented at the eleventh hour and is still living.

Some days ago a report was published from Mr. Kawakami, Japanese commercial agent at Vladivostok, announcing his resumption of duties and warning his nationals to exercise great care so as not to penetrate forbidden precincts or otherwise create any suspicions of acting as spies. It now transpires that 16 Japanese subjects are lying in jail charged with the offence of trespass for purposes of secret investigation. Before Mr. Kawakami resumed his duties Japanese interests were in charge of the United States Commercial Agent, Mr. Greene—a son of the well known Dr. Greene of Tokyo—who seems to have discharged this office with due zeal. On the 2nd of May he reported to the Japanese Government that 8 of its subjects were in durance vile, and that two of them had lain in prison for a month and a half. Mr. Greene suggested that they had probably erred through inadvertence as a part of Vladivostok, though included within the limits of the fortress, is not distinguished in any way from the absolutely accessible quarters of the town. What steps the Japanese Authorities took in consequence of this report we are not informed, but it seems that on Mr. Kawakami's resumption of office he and Mr. Greene visited the prison and found that sixteen Japanese subjects were incarcerated, most of them, so far as we can gather, on suspicion of being spies.

It was supposed that Viscount Fujinami was to be chief of the new Basji Kyoku but Baron Sone has been appointed and will hold the post in conjunction with that of Privy Councillor, receiving the treatment of a Shinnin official. Baron Sone has been a prominently zealous supporter of the movement for improving the breed of horses in Japan and it seems appropriate that he should be nominated to this post. The offices of the Basji Kyoku have been opened in the buildings originally belonging to M. Boissonade de Fontarabie, and recently used for the Portuguese Legation.

We are glad to note that His Excellency Governor Sufu has consented to become the first President of the Yokohama Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals. Although most of the Society's work for the present must be purely on educational lines, a good deal may be accomplished by it in lessening the tale of senseless, thoughtless cruelty to dumb animals which at the moment too often disgraces the fair fame of Japan. Mr. Cyril Allen, the Hon. Secretary, we hope will have plenty of work and rapidly fill the membership roll.

The Governor of Gumma Prefecture reports that on the night of the 31st-1st frost fell in the Tone and Ogawa districts, causing great injury to the mulberry trees and the crops in general. Frost in June is something quite unprecedented in Japan proper throughout the period when records have been kept. In 1893 on May 6th and in 1896 on May 8th there was a similar phenomenon, but nothing so late as June is remembered.

News from Vladivostok says that the Askold was towed into port there on the 29th of May. She is believed to have struck a floating mine. The Askold's name is very familiar to the public. She is one of the ships which escaped from Port Arthur after the fight on the 10th of August, 1904, and was disarmed in Shanghai.

The experiments recently made—as explained in these columns—with a view to establishing telephonic connection between Awomori and Hakodate, have evidently been successful, for it is announced that a telephone will be opened from July 1st.

The case of General Stoessel continues to attract much attention in Russia. A Russian journal, translated by Japanese papers, says that the preliminary inquiry has elicited various damaging facts; as for example, that he allowed the enemy to obtain undisputed possession of two places vital to the defence of the fortress; that he decided on surrender, though only four out of seventeen staff officers present at the council supported the proposition; that he disregarded General Smirnov's representations as to the gun ammunition not being exhausted; as to there being food enough for another month and as to the scurvy patients being ready to take their place in the ranks at the crucial moment; and that, whereas others officers had to leave their belongings behind them, Stoessel carried away goods sufficient to load some 40 carts. Judging from the rumours current at the time of the surrender, it was easy to foresee that Stoessel would have to answer to a court martial for his acts, but we are happy to think that the recent rumours of his condemnation to death are unfounded.

The Official Gazette announces a number of changes in the Telephone Regulations. There are sixty-six articles in the announcement, and we are therefore compelled to give their gist only. In the first place, fees varying from 5 to 2 yen are to be hereafter levied for transferring a telephone from one name to another. This is intended to check an abuse which has become very common of late, namely, the sale of claims to telephones. Shrewd people have taken advantage of the Government's inability to meet the ever increasing demand for telephones. They make application for a telephone, or, it may be, several telephones, and then they sell the privilege when the time for its practical enjoyment approaches. This will be more or less checked by the levying of fees for transfer, and by the scrutiny accompanying it. In the next place two new methods of telephone connexion are announced. One (called kyodo kaniu) provides that any one living within 240 yards of a telephone wire may have his house connected with the wire on obtaining the consent of the telephone-owner; and another (called rensetsu kaniu) provides that any one living within the same distance from the residence of a telephone-owner, may have connexion made with that residence, the owner being of course a consenting party. The charges for the rensetsu system are much less than those for the kyodo system, the intention evidently being to afford facilities for connexions within the same compound. It should be added that as transfers will not be allowed after August 1st except in specially enumerated cases, any persons who are now holding a claim to the installation of a telephone which they do not themselves intend to use, may formally abandon it, and will receive on abandonment the sum paid when making the original application.

The Governor of Hokkaido and the leading residents have formed a plan for the independent development of the region. They propose to borrow a sum of 18 million yen which is to be applied to the improvement of the harbours at Kushiro, Abashiri, Nemuro, Rumoye and Otaru, and to works of irrigation and drainage. The debt would be repaid in 35 years, and for its service the idea is to appropriate the proceeds of forest lands. The area of publicly owned forests in Hokkaido is 7½ million acres. Of course there is no intention of promiscuous timber-felling. What is proposed is that the cutting of trees should be exactly proportioned to their rate of growth. Thus of trees which take 120 years to mature, only one one-hundred-and-twentieth would be felled annually, and care would be taken to plant twice as many as had been cut. Proceeding in accordance with this rule there would be 5,500 acres of timber to fell yearly, and there would result a revenue of 800,000 yen. The Governor does not propose that the work of felling should be undertaken officially; he would farm it out to the best bidders. The project sounds attractive, but unless some mistake has been made by the journals quoting the figures, we do not see how the anticipated revenue would suffice. Eight hundred thousand yen does not represent even 5 per cent. on 18 millions, and this is a project which few capitalists would look at under 7 per cent.

The Tokyo Asahi says that keen competition has sprung up on the Yokohama-Shanghai line between Messrs. Butterfield and Swire and the Nippon Yusen Kaisha. The latter had chartered during the war three steamers belonging to the former. These were recently released and their owners, probably not having any other immediate use for them, kept them on the Shanghai line and endeavoured to secure freight and passengers by lowering the rates some 30 or 40 per cent. The Japanese Company did not at first concern itself about this competition, but finding that the reduced rates were telling, it has entered the lists. The Asahi seeks to do a good turn to its nationals by alleging that the three steamers employed by the foreign firm are old and slow ships, not to be compared for a moment with the steamers of the Nippon Yusen Kaisha.

It is stated (Asahi Shimbun) that an attempt has been made to terminate the competition between the Nippon Yusen Kaisha and Messrs. Butterfield & Swire on the Yokohama and Shanghai line. The overture is said to have come from the latter firm, which proposed that a rate of freight should be fixed by mutual agreement and that the traffic should be pooled, but the Nippon Yusen Kaisha declined to entertain the proposal and will continue the competition to the end. The same two companies are competing on the Japan-Siam line also.

The revolutionary Russian journal published in Nagasaki finds its principal field of circulation, it is said, in the Amur region. Apparently it is considered by the Authorities to have dangerous potentialities for rumour says that the Russian consul at Nagasaki contemplates starting a newspaper which shall represent the opposite line of policy. Judging from translations occasionally appearing in the Japanese newspapers the Nagasaki journal, while not employing violent language, draws touching pictures of the sufferings entailed upon the lower orders in Russia by the present regimen. It says that innumerable Russian subjects are exposed to the greatest privations for no other crime than the love of liberty. Apparently sympathisers are invited to subscribe for the relief of these sufferers.

The Hochi Shimbun publishes harrowing accounts of the destruction wrought by the frost in Gumma prefecture. Throughout two districts the aspect of the country has been changed to that of winter. In the Asahi it is stated that the snow season has lasted 50 days and the frost season 20 days longer than usual. Agriculturists are in a despairing mood, but our contemporary seeks to rally them by cheering words. It is too early yet to form pessimistic forecasts.

A San Francisco telegram says that a Pole has given information to the police of an anarchist plot to assassinate President Roosevelt. The names of the principal persons concerned are said to have been furnished, and vigorous measures for their arrest are being taken.

Another batch of a hundred Chinese students has reached Japan, bringing the number now in Tokyo to over eight thousand. Many of these students are earning a most unenviable reputation. We frequently read of them engaging in very reprehensible courses, as, for example, way-laying girl students when the latter are returning from school, or seeking to open correspondence with them, and also they are accused of irregularities more common to youth but not less indicative of much immorality. It may be assumed that these evil doings are confined to a small minority of the lads, but they impair the reputation of the whole. The present Chinese Minister in Japan is said to have made strong representations on the subject to the Peking Government. His Excellency urges that greater care should be taken by local authorities in selecting students. In the same despatch he is said to have explained that he is discussing with the Department of Education in Tokyo the feasibility of opening the better-class of schools more widely to Chinese students.

We find in the Asahi Shimbun a somewhat vague and sensational statement as to the naval estimates for next year. The allegation is that whereas the ordinary outlays on account of the Navy are only 28 million yen this year, they will be 38 millions next year, and moreover an item of 20 millions will appear under the heading of extraordinary expenditures which do not belong to the regular catalogue of naval outlays, and consequently do not include restorations (fukukin) or replacements (hosoku). This would bring the naval budget to 58 millions without any appropriation for an increase of strength. Presumably what is indicated by extraordinary outlays not belonging to regular naval expenses must be harbour constructions or some special arrangements for supplying coal briquettes. The whole statement may turn out to be a great exaggeration, but probably we shall not be wrong in concluding that a considerable development of naval programme is contemplated next year.

It is stated (Jiji Shimpō) that the experiences garnered in the recent war as to land defences are so numerous and so important as to have caused a suspension of the unfinished fortifications at several places, in Japan. Apparently no occasion is thought to exist for altering already completed defences, or perhaps the cost of such work is deterrent, temporarily at all events. But in the Bakan Strait, the Kitan Strait (between Ki and Awaji), at Maizuru and at Hakodate, where the various works have not yet been carried to completion, all further operations have been arrested pending the preparation of engineering plans which shall embody the results of the above experiences.

In the Asahi it is stated that many foreign residents are interpreting the decision of the Hague Court as exempting them not only from all municipal taxes on house property, but also from any obligation to pay the supplementary municipal rates (fuka-zei) on income tax and even on business tax. The municipal authorities, according to our contemporary, are much perplexed how to proceed. They have not the consent of the Central Government to take the usual legal measures against these foreign defaulters, and, on the other hand, they have no funds available to make up the deficiency. It will appear to the majority of persons that if a foreign resident is liable for income tax and business tax as levied by the central Government, he must also be liable for the municipal rates levied in supplement of these taxes. The award of the Hague Court referred to house property only and had nothing to do with income tax or business tax.

X Count Okuma and Baron Shibusawa are interesting themselves earnestly on behalf of the Kumamoto Leper Hospital started by Miss Riddel 15 years ago, and the Jiji Shimpō is lending them its vigorous support. The Hospital in threatened with inability to pay its way. Some 400 lepers are supported there at a yearly cost of 5,000 yen, and we learn that there is now a deficiency amounting to four-fifths of that sum. Hence unless substantial help be forthcoming something like a catastrophe impends. Assistance could doubtless be obtained from England and America, to say nothing of Germany and France, if the matter were brought to their notice, but the Jiji Shimpō justly remarks that an appeal for foreign charity in such a matter would be discreditable to the Japanese, who ought to be able to provide for their own lepers. Kind-hearted people, however, will not consider the question of nationality, though it is very right that the Japanese should consider it where their own people are in need.

Reference is again made to the fact that several foreign residents of Yokohama persist in refusing to pay the municipal levies on account of income tax and business tax. It has been explained to them that these taxes differ radically from the house tax, which is an impost on tangible property, but they decline to be convinced. On the other hand, if the local authorities proceed against them as they would against ordinary defaulters, the problem will assume a diplomatic character, which the Japanese Government wishes to avoid. The matter is now under discussion and negotiation at the Foreign Office. Meanwhile the total amount of indebtedness on the part of the defaulters is said to be 100,000 yen.

THE BOOKSHELF.

"The Nanshu Meigwa-Yen."

The eighth volume of this work has now appeared. Since the publication commenced Chinese pictures have acquired a great vogue in Japan and we imagine that the Nanshu Meigwa-yen must be now receiving a hearty welcome and thus repaying in some degree the enterprise of its compilers and publishers. The volume now before us contains ten reproductions of celebrated landscape paintings, and since there is no English text nor anything to indicate the Chinese pronunciations of the ideographs representing the names of the artists, we shall follow our usual plan of describing the plates one by one:—

1.—Bamboos and rocks by Hsia Chang of the Ming dynasty (b. 1388 d. 1471). Sepia on silk. Hsia Chang was a noted scholar as well as a celebrated painter. Dying in the Chenghwa era he received a state funeral. His bamboos tossed by the wind are very fine, but his rocks lack solidity, thus resembling smoke rather than stone.

2.—A landscape painted in sepia on a paper fan by Wen Chengming of the Ming Dynasty (b. 1470 d. 1560). Like Hsia Chang he was a member of the Hanlin. He received the Imperial command to compile a history of China, but he ultimately resigned his official position and devoted himself solely to painting. He seems to have achieved great renown and his fame spread to Japan, but the specimen of his work re-produced by the Nanshu Meigwa-yen and preserved in the temple Manju on Obaku-zan has not any notable merit.

3.—Autumnal landscape painted in sepia on a paper fan by Li Ipai of the Ming dynasty and in the possession of the temple mentioned under No. 2. Li Ipai's name is not preserved in any generally accessible annals, and the inference is that he did not attain high fame. Yet the example of his work here shown is far tenderer, better composed and more pleasing than that by Wen Chengming (No. 2).

4.—Looking at a waterfall under pine trees; sepia on silk by Li Liufang of the Ming dynasty—he became an official in 1575 but soon resigned and devoted himself to painting and poetry. He is remembered for acts of filial piety as well as for artistic ability, but the picture before us does not indicate that he rose above the ordinary level of the Ming painters, a high level, however, it must be admitted.

5.—Five Pine Trees; sepia on silk by Fan Chingwen of the Ming dynasty, who gained admittance to the Hanlin Academy in 1613, and is counted one of the greatest artists of the later Ming era. This picture shows power of brush and skilful composition and has a fine atmospheric effect. It inspires a strong desire to see further works of a master evidently so worthy of renown.

6.—Pines and hills by Chang Sheng of the early Tsing dynasty; sepia on silk. An exquisitely tender painting, finely composed, well centered and showing beautiful atmospheric effects. This artist exercised much influence on the Japanese painters who, at the close of the 18th century, inaugurated a revival of the Chinese school in Japan.

7.—Orchids in a deep valley; in sepia on silk by Tang Mi of the early Tsing dynasty. The work is strong and realistic, but the subject is not very attractive.

8.—Rishi amusing themselves; in sepia on two leaves of a fusuma, by the Japanese artist Ikeno Taiga (already spoken of in Vol. IV. of this series). A picture with few merits and disfigured by the curious error of figures in the background being brought closer to the eye than those in the immediate foreground.

9.—A farmers' hamlet in a valley; in light colours 10.—An autumnal forest; in silk by Yosa Buson (a Japanese artist) in his 66th year (1786). These pictures might almost be classed with those of the new modern school inaugurated by Hashimoto Gaho. They combine the delicacy and brush power of the Japanese masters with the realism of the Western academies. In both pictures, especially the second, the atmosphere effects are admirable.

"The Kokka."

Number 192 Volume XVI, of the "Kokka" has just appeared in its English dress. It is as usual very attractive. There are twelve illustrations, and the letter-press consists of four descriptive articles—a scene from Mitsunaga's Ban-dainagon; some lanterns of ancient Korea; a landscape of the Ashikaga period; and the Gods of Wind and Thunder—together with Mr. Hamada Kosaku's fourth essay on Grecco-Indian influence upon Far-Eastern art. Mitsunaga's celebrated scrolls are particularly interesting as examples of Japanese pictorial art nine hundred years ago, and the Gods of the Wind and the Thunder by Nomura Sotatsu are great in conception as they are powerful in execution. Considerable space is devoted to an account (with excellent illustrations) of five stone lanterns (toro) standing in the enclosures of Korean temples and dating from a period at least nine hundred years back. These lanterns are the prototypes of Japanese ishi-doro as set up in the precincts of temples. One of them, the last among the five in order of cataloguing, has a full-page illustration devoted to it, as well as four columns of descriptive matter. And well it merits the distinction, for it is quite an exceptionally fine object of its class, and the style of the sculpture clearly indicates the Indian influence which invaded the Far East in the train of Buddhism. This highly interesting and graceful object is, we believe, now en route for Tokyo, where it will be purchasable by any collector. Probably it will go to America. The connoisseurs of the United States are prone to annex everything really notable that comes into the Japanese market.

YOKOHAMA FOREIGN BOARD OF TRADE.

Committee:—Messrs. C. V. Sale (Chairman), M. Beart (Vice-Chairman), W. T. Payne, D. H. Blake, V. A. Caesar Hawkins, J. A. Harmsen, V. R. Bowden, and J. T. Griffin.

CERTIFICATES OF ORIGIN.

The following is a translation of a notice now posted at the Custom House:—

"According to Article 2 of the Regulations for the enforcement of the Customs Duties Law, the benefits of the Conventional Tariff can only be secured when the Import application is accompanied by a Certificate of Origin. Hitherto, there have been many persons who, for one reason or another have asked for an extension of time within which to present the said Certificate. In view of the recent promulgation of the Customs Duties Law, these extensions have been granted, but now that sufficient time has elapsed for importers to acquaint themselves with the regulations, it is considered that there is no reason for granting such extensions, and it has therefore been decided that from the 1st October, 1906, Certificates of Origin which do not comply with requirements will not be accepted, nor will any extra time be granted for presentation."

Your Committee have investigated the subject and find that the notice does not involve any alteration of the regulations, but insists upon the fulfilment of a law which has hitherto been kept somewhat in abeyance. It appears that many merchants attach little importance to the regulation, and an extension, which in the first place was granted as a privilege, is now regarded as a right, while the number of requests for such extensions is constantly on the increase and involves a serious addition to the clerical work of the Customs staff.

Your Committee would strongly recommend importers to make every possible effort to produce Certificates of Origin, with their import application. At the same time, they consider that a strict application of the law will often entail serious hardship, and it is their intention to suggest to the Authorities that the difficulty might be overcome by such an alteration of the law as would permit the grant of an extension upon payment of a moderate fee.

TOKYO EXHIBITION.

A meeting of the Yokohama Exhibitors was held at the office of the Board on the 31st ult., when the Chairman explained the negotiations with the authorities that had taken place since the previous meeting. After some discussion, it was finally decided to accept the suggestion of the Tokyo Fu that the Tokyo exhibitors and the Yokohama exhibitors should meet together on the 5th June, at 2 p.m. at the Tokyo Fu-cho. For this purpose a committee to represent the Yokohama exhibitors was then elected, consisting of Messrs. Faber & Voigt, F. W. Horne, Esq., and Messrs. W. M. Strachan & Co., Limited.

CUSTOMS APPEAL.

Mr. Y. Sakatani, Minister for Finance, delivered a decision on May 31st in an appeal instituted by Messrs. Sale and Frazar, Kobe, against a judgment given by the Kobe Customs. The firm imported 196 pieces of bar steel on which the Customs imposed 7½ per cent. ad val duty in accordance with No. 241 of the tariff. Messrs. Sale and Frazar filed a protest against the imposition contending that the material was refined by the Siemens and Martin system and that consequently it should be regarded as best iron or mild steel. The nature of the material was different from the steel provided in No. 241 which was always manufactured by means of the crucible. The importers further held that the mild steel should be dealt with under No. 217. The Kobe Customs dismissed the protest on the ground that the difference between mild steel and hard steel could not be based on the nature of the manufacturing process. The material in dispute was found to be hard steel on chemical analysis by the Customs. The appeal was rejected for the same reason adopted by the Customs.

IN MEMORY OF SESHU.

THE 18th of February, 1905, was the 400th anniversary of the death of the immortal Japanese artist SESHU. His admirers, one may almost say his worshippers, would have celebrated the day in some fitting manner, but the war was then at its height so that the project had to be postponed. It was taken up again recently, however, and arrangements were made to organize an exhibition of the great master's pictures. Count INOUE, who is himself the happy possessor of some admirable specimens of SESHU's skill, placed his house at the disposal of the projectors, and on the 2nd instant from 1 to 4 p.m. a select few of Tokyo's virtuosi had the great privilege of examining about fifty genuine examples of SESHU's work. The affair being in a private house, admission had to be limited by invitation, and so far as would be judged not more than a hundred persons attended, all of them qualified to appreciate the treat prepared for them. Every one at all familiar with Japanese pictorial art has made the acquaintance of SESHU's pictures, or at least of pictures claiming to be SESHU's, for it need scarcely be said that he has been copied again and again. To have seen and studied a few of the originals ought, however, to be an effective protection against being deceived by a copy, for SESHU's combination of vigour and tenderness are scarcely imitable by a smaller master. Nevertheless that this is not universally true was signally demonstrated at the exhibition on the 2nd instant, for there was shown a maki-mono from SESHU's brush and beside it a copy from the brush of Gejo. The scroll was about 50 feet long and from end to end it showed a series of exquisite landscapes, painted with all the renowned master's strength and lofty idealism; yet the copy was so accurate that while every line and every detail of the elaborate original seemed to have been reproduced exactly, there was no palpable sacrifice of either force or delicacy. SESHU is the main link between the schools of China and Japan. He recognised the full beauties of the grand landscape painters of the SUNG, YUAN and early MING epochs, and became so thoroughly imbued with their spirit that it is often difficult to distinguish his work from that of his Chinese fellow-artists. Undoubtedly his forte lay in landscape and sea-scape. The human form never attracted him, unless it had become a vehicle for the expression of some overwhelming emotion. Neither did he care for such subjects as soft plumaged birds or glowing flowers. He could paint a dragon such as the monster was never imagined except by a true believer in its existence; he could depict a Rishi exhaling a palpable atmosphere of supernatural calm and passionless austerity; he could produce a Daruma the very incarnation of stern asceticism, or a Shoki purged of every feeling except the thirst for demons' blood, and at times he would limn a majestic heron or a woeful crow tortured by the elements. But what he really loved was a landscape combining the tender grace of Japanese scenery with the austere solemnity of the Chinese literateur's ideal. Several exquisite examples of this style were to be seen in Count INOUE's house at the centennial display. Sometimes they showed evidence that SESHU's close observation of nature impelled him to break away from the hard outlines of his Chinese prototypes, and occasionally his instinctive sense of the heart of light that pulsates somewhere in every perfect scenic form found delightful expression. These highest attainments were exquisitely apparent in two tiny landscapes and in a winter view on a larger scale—three pictures of which no admiration would be excessive. But in general the oppressively hard outline obtruded itself somewhere, and not infrequently that other fault so common in the Chinese School, insufficiency of aerial perspective, made itself apparent. It was not indeed until the days of KANO MOTONOBU that these disfiguring elements disappeared altogether, and, curiously enough, MOTONOBU's countrymen have not yet fully discovered the merit of his works, in this respect, or recognised the corresponding defects of SESHU's. The fact is that SESHU stands alone among Japanese landscape-painters in a feature which appeals overwhelmingly to his nationals' heart, majestic refinement of tone. He has a grandeur of style that has never been surpassed and seldom equalled. For that they love him and will always love him so long as the Yamato-damashii remains unimpaired. And certainly he deserves their affection.

THE TREASURY AND FOREIGN CAPITAL.

FULLER investigation throws a somewhat new light on the affair of the Industrial Bank and the Government. Even those that have hitherto undertaken to explain the official position failed to make the situation clear and misunderstandings naturally followed. The Asahi Shimbun, for example, argued that no better security is obtainable in Japan than that which the administrative districts are in a position to offer, and that seven per cent., as the Bank's programme set forth, was therefore an unduly high rate. But it is precisely here that a convincing argument in the Government's favour presents itself. It is undoubtedly true as a general rule that the administrative districts have excellent credit and that they should receive the best treatment, after the Central Government, at the hands of foreign lenders. There are, however, certain kinds of business which would be unwelcome to foreign capitalists, first because the amounts involved are too small to be made the basis of transactions in the foreign money market, and secondly because the objects on which the money is to be expended do not constitute tangible security. Such objects are, for example, irrigation schemes, reclamation projects, water-works and so forth. In several localities the outlay of comparatively trifling sums on filling and draining, or on damming and conducting water, means that areas of land hitherto unproductive are rendered arable. This kind of enterprise is common enough in Japan, and would be commoner if funds were procurable at reasonable rates of interest. But it is evident that London capitalists can not be interested in programmes of reclaiming a few acres of foreshore in some remote part of Japan, or in plans to convert a few dry fields into wet for the sake of Japanese hamlets not marked on any accessible map. If money is to be sought abroad for purposes of this nature some strong bank must step in, constitute itself the scrutinizer of the projects, and become security for the loans required. It is in these capacities that the Treasury and the Home Department suggest enlisting the services of the Industrial Bank. The Bank would have to undertake the onerous duty of investigating the conditions of the localities where works of irrigation or reclamation or what not are to be carried out, and would then have to make itself responsible vis-à-vis the foreign lenders. All this demands time, trouble, outlay and risk. It represents a class of business beyond the intelligent reach of outsiders, and there is no reason whatever why the monopoly of it should not be taken by the Industrial Bank, for certainly no foreign syndicate would be either competent or willing. We understand that the recommendations made to the Local Governors by the Ministers of Finance and Home Affairs had reference solely to finance operations of this character. It seems a pity that the distinction was not rendered clearer to the public from the outset. Even the Government's apologist in the Fiji Shimpō spoiled his case by attempting to discredit all capital-importing mechanism other than the Industrial Bank. He alleged that the foreign shareholders of the Bank comprised all the leading British capitalists who concern themselves with foreign loans, and that any other persons volunteering to act as agents would be obliged ultimately to come to these capitalists. That is not true. What is true, however, and what probably the Fiji Shimpō's informant had in mind, is that there are now in Japan several men who, though professing to be in a position to finance Japanese enterprises, have really no competence of the kind, and, if entrusted with such work, must offer it to others, confining themselves to the role of mere go-betweens. Ignorant Japanese may employ these people but their true character will be known sooner or later.

THE WEALTH OF JAPAN.

MR. E. H. VICKERS addresses us on the subject of the wealth of Japan, his especial purpose bring to query some figures published in our editorial columns on the 23rd of May. He does not appear to have read our article carefully before setting out to traverse it. For he represents us as criticising the Keizai Zasshi's estimates, whereas in fact there was no question of any estimates made by that journal. The Keizai Zasshi merely published the calculations of "a certain statistician," and did not either endorse or condemn them, while we, on our side, were careful to refrain from attributing to the Keizai itself any of the estimates it reproduced. We note also that Mr. VICKERS writes as though we had essayed, or pretended to set forth, some exhaustive calculation, whereas we explicitly deprecated any such hypothesis by writing:—"We do not for a moment pretend that our calculation is quite accurate, but we do claim that it is much nearer the truth than the calculation of the Keizai Zasshi's statistician." In fact, we expressly guarded ourselves against being supposed to have formulated any complete theorem.

Passing now to the main questions at issue, we may be pardoned for defining them clearly inasmuch as our correspondent seems to have misconceived them. First, the Keizai Zasshi's informant, having arrived at a certain conclusion as to the national wealth, proceeded to point out that the aggregate taxes levied by the Central Government and the Communes—which aggregate he put at 278,436,813 yen—amount to 2.3 per cent. of the wealth, and consequently, if the nation's income be taken as 5 per cent. of its wealth, it results that nearly one-half of the income is paid annually in the form of taxes. Our comment upon that was to inquire whether actual experience would lead any one to such a conclusion, and whether it would not be much nearer the truth to say that we pay at most one-twentieth of our incomes yearly in taxes. Thereupon Mr. VICKERS addresses himself with minute accuracy to show that if the sum be taken of a man's indirect taxes on the tobacco he smokes, the clothes he wears, the journeys he makes, the registrations he effects, the stamps he uses, the death-rates his heir has to defray and so forth, he may ultimately be found to have paid anything from one-fifth to nearly one-half of his income. That is all very well, but it is quite beside the mark. The Keizai Zasshi's statistician explicitly limited the taxes taken by him for the purposes of his estimate: limited them to 278 millions of yen in round numbers. With that limitation he found that the nation pays about one-half of its yearly income in taxes. When then Mr. VICKERS, by adding to the Japanese statistician's table a number of items not originally included in it, seeks to prove that the statistician may be right after all, he adopts a species of logic analogous to that of the man who contended that a quatr measure might hold a great deal more than 2 pints if its dimensions were increased.

The second issue—and the only remaining one that calls for consideration here—is this:—Our article said, "At all events we shall be quite on the safe side if we assume that the direct taxes paid by the nation at present represent at most one-twentieth of its income." It will be observed that we clearly confined our calculation to the direct taxes, inasmuch as it is practically impossible to form any accurate estimate of the indirect taxes. We carefully premised the omission of such taxes as the customs dues, the impost on sake, the fees for postage and telegraphs, the tobacco monopoly and the State revenue from railways, because the incidence of these taxes is not general, and because also, our object being to find a basis for calculating the national wealth, we desired to take a conservative view. But here Mr. VICKERS objects:—"We have no more right to assume that 170 million yen of direct taxes represents one-twentieth of the national income than we have to assume that it represents one-fifth or one hundredth of that income," and he adds:—"Until we have trustworthy facts to show the ratio of such taxes to the total national income, it is fruitless to argue this point." Formidable words these, no doubt, but just a little bit pragmatical when applied to a calculation which never professed to be more than a not unreasonable hypothesis. Does Mr. VICKERS mean to affirm that experience is to be dismissed as an altogether worthless guide in this matter? Our own experience and the experience of many Japanese whom we have consulted is that the average payment on account of direct taxes—namely, the only easily calculable taxes—does not exceed one-twentieth of the income. Experience does not indicate "one-fifth" or "one-hundredth"; it indicates approximately one-twentieth, and therefore we have some small right to assume one-twentieth, Mr. VICKERS non-obstante. At all events we deem it much more useful and much more instructive to suggest and debate methods of estimating the national wealth than to wait for the millenium of arithmetic when everything will be as clear as noon-day.

One word more. Our correspondent has constructed a paradox which sounds very pretty but which labours under a defect not infrequent in such figures of speech. He says:—"The Keizai Zasshi argues from an unverified sum of national wealth to what seems to the Mail an absurd ratio of taxation"—we never used the adjective "absurd"—; "whereas the Mail argues from an absurd sum of national wealth." Mr. VICKERS is pleased to apply the term "absurd" to our tentative estimate of the national wealth of Japan. May we ask on what authority he pens this sweeping criticism? He affirms also that we "argue from a sum of national wealth." We have done nothing of the kind. We have shown that a certain line of reasoning leads to a certain conclusion concerning the amount of the nation's wealth, but we have not used that conclusion as a basis for any argument whatever. Mr. VICKERS' letter is very interesting and in the abstract we agree with the majority of his propositions, but their application to the particular question at issue is not altogether satisfactory. We wish, too, that instead of restricting himself to destructive criticism he would apply his wide research and well known ability to constructive purposes. Will he tell us plainly, for example, whether he endorses the statement of the Keizai Zasshi's statistician that taxes aggregating 278 millions of yen represent nearly one-half of the national income. If so, then, when the tax-payer's burden is swelled by all the additional imposts that Mr. VICKERS indicates, it will be a heavy load indeed.

RUSSIA ON THE AMUR.

A TRAVELLER who has just returned to Peking and who is said to be trustworthy, makes some interesting statements which are wired to Tokyo by the correspondent of the Asahi Shimbun. He alleges that the activity of the Russians in the Amur region is conspicuous. They are felling timber and digging mines just as though the place belonged to them, and to the remonstrances of the Chinese local officials they reply that so long as the negotiations between their country and China are not concluded, the Amur region is practically Russian property; or they pretext some undefined treaty; or they insist that they are working in combination with Chinese. Their engineers are taking steps to dredge the Sungari, and their prospectors are exploiting mines at Petuna. They are also busily working at a railway from Tsitsihar to Aikun and are collecting material to double the track on the East-Chinese Railway. This report comes in the sequel of so many others of the same character that it can not be altogether ignored. There is partial confirmation in the shape of a telegram from Peking to the Nichi Nichi Shimbun which states that the Russians, according to an official report sent by the Chinese Governor of the Amur region, are employing several thousands of men to dredge and deepen the Sungari. Their object appears to be the provision of transport facilities and they are sparing no expense. Of course if the Sungari could be made navigable from its junction with the Amur, Russia would have a valuable waterway from the north-eastern coast of Asia to the heart of Manchuria. She will doubtless claim that under the Aigun Treaty of 1858 she enjoys a full and exclusive right to navigate the Sungari. But it is more than doubtful whether foreign Powers would to-day recognise that article of the Treaty. The most-favoured-nation clause would be an idle formula were China free to grant, or Russia to exact, the exclusive privilege of navigating the internal waters of Manchuria. The Hochi Shimbun dwells at some length on the subject. It recalls the fact that the Treaty of Aigun was wrested from China by MURAVIEFF, and that it secures to Russia the monopoly of transport on the waters of the Ussuri, the Sungari and the Amur. So long as Russia retains that monopoly the opening of northern Manchuria would be a mere farce, says the Asahi, echoing an opinion which has been formulated more than once lately. But the estimate seems to us to be somewhat exaggerated. The Sungari and the Ussuri have little waterway value for purposes of foreign commerce except as affluents of the Amur, which means that they serve only for local purposes of transport or for communication with the Sea of Okhotsk. At any rate whatever be their value, it appears quite impossible, as the Hochi justly remarks, that Russia will attempt to maintain this exclusive right of riverine navigation in the face of the last clause of the 3rd Article of the Portsmouth Treaty, which says:—"The Imperial Government of Russia declare that they have not in Manchuria any territorial advantages or preferential or exclusive concessions in impairment of Chinese sovereignty or inconsistent with the principle of equal opportunity." It is scarcely conceivable that the drafters of this clause were ignorant of the provisions of the Aigun Treaty, a document which ranks among the celebrated conventions of East-Asian history. But whether they were ignorant of it or not, there can be no question that by agreeing to the insertion of the above article they pledged Russia to abandon all such privileges as the exclusive right of waterway now under consideration, and we repeat our often-expressed conviction that Russia has no intention of flouting the provisions of the Portsmouth Treaty almost before the ink is dry on the document. Proof remains to be furnished that she is seeking to monopolise the transport facilities furnished by the Sungari. The mere act of dredging the river does not establish anything of the kind. She alone is in a position just now to profit by the use of the river, and she may find it worth her while to spend some money on rendering it valuable, but until she is convicted of attempting to control it to the exclusion of other nations, we have no right to attribute to her any such intention.

MRS. HUGH FRASER'S LECTURE.

As was only to be expected, Mrs. Hugh Fraser's lecture on "Marion Crawford, His Roman Life and Work," drew a very interested audience to the Van Schaick Hall on Wednesday evening. The proceedings opened with an overture by Mrs. A. Bellamy Brown and Mr. W. Karl Vincent, Mendelssohn's finely dramatic piece of descriptive writing from "Fingal's Cave"—"The Hebrides"—which was played with much fire and sustained feeling. Mrs. Hugh Fraser was then introduced to the audience by Mr. A. Bellamy Brown, who said his task was of the easiest and pleasantest, for Mrs. Fraser during her present stay in Japan was increasing day by day the circle of her friends, won to her side by the potent influence of a charming and unique personality. He referred to her own writings, among which he thought "Palladia" held pride of place, for it told the story of a woman who was a queen of sorrows but most decidedly a queen to love. Of Mr. Marion Crawford's books he had little to say beyond referring to their charm of imagery, style and analytical skill. The Italian novels, beginning with "Saracinesca" and on through the whole series were a veritable glory to English literature, while his historical writings placed him in the forefront of living. Men of Letters, not only for their deep research and exquisite word painting, but also for the quiet sardonic humour which flashed upon the reader ever and anon in the course of the richly varied narrative.

Mrs. Fraser began her lecture with a reference to the birthplace of her brother, the Baths of Lucca, high up in the Tuscan hills, a beautiful old town set down amid forests of chestnut trees. Like Alexander the Great, Napoleon, and other heroes of old renown, Marion Crawford saw the light in the month of August—"when the sun was in Leo; the period of our great leaps in Italy, when the country people will tell you all the forces are at their strongest, wine at its headiest, venomous insects most poisonous and human pulses at their hottest." He came of good stock, of a family whose genealogical tree boasts of many a man who played no mean part in his own particular time; and with the fighting strains were mingled strands which united him in lineal descent with the great Corneille. Very early in childhood he set himself to acquire knowledge and self-restraint, and Mrs. Fraser told several anecdotes illustrative of both phases in her brother's character which hovered between the grave and the gay. His education, begun in Italy, continued in America, polished up in England—he graduated at Cambridge—and finished in Germany, was most cosmopolitan, and up till the age of twenty he gave no indication of what his future career would be, for he was only faithful to mathematics, Latin and music, while novels had but small attraction for him. The complete loss of the family fortune altered the whole tenor of his life. Mrs. Fraser told many an intimate story of this period of his history, showing how all unconsciously he was garnering the experiences and making the observations which were to blossom out in after years in "The Tale of a Lonely Parish"; "Mr. Isaacs," "A Roman Singer"; "Saracinesca"; "Takisara"; "San' Ilario"; "Corleone"; of excursions made in the Abruzzi and of the strange adventures which befel him there. These wanderings over he betook himself to Allahabad and edited the Indian Herald, for a year. It was there that he made the acquaintance of a Persian jewel merchant whom he afterwards introduced to the world as "Mr. Isaacs." This was in 1882, and then his family knew that he had discovered his vocation. From that time on his pen has never been idle, as all interested in books well know.

A break was made in the lecture at this point, and the following musical programme was submitted:—

Song....."La Serenata," with Violin and Piano accompaniment .....Braga.
Mrs. Morton Grinnell, Miss Edna Ballagh, and Miss Bessie Ballagh.
Piano Solo ..... { "Liebestraum" .....Liszt.
"Romance" .....Schumann.
Miss Bessie Ballagh.
Song ..... { "My Dreams" .....Paolo Tosti.
"Madrigal" .....Chaminade.
Mrs. Morton Grinnell.
Violin Solo ..... { "Adoration" .....Barowski.
"Air" (on G. String).....Bach-Wilhelmy.
Miss Edna Ballagh.

Mrs. Morton Grinnell is the possessor of a glorious voice, and whether singing in Italian, English or French entranced the ears and understanding of her auditors, sometimes by the delicacy of her phrasing and at others by the passionate rapture of the declamatory passages. The Misses Ballagh made their débüt before a Yokohama audience and created a decidedly happy impression, being rewarded with two lovely baskets of flowers. They are mistresses of their respective instruments and give promise of a brilliant future.

On resuming Mrs. Fraser gave a sketch of Rome and the Romans at the time when Mr. Marion Crawford settled down to study them preparatory to giving to the world his clever, penetrating sketches of modern Italian life. Very interesting was her description of the passing of the old Roman nobility beneath the spell of lovely English and American brides who danced into the old palaces, set the antiquated coronets on pretty heads, and opened the Roman windows to modern Europe. The lecturer then briefly sketched the portraits of one of the old Roman families and described the materials upon which Mr. Crawford laboured, and told how the working out of his scheme finally took him to Sorrento, his present home. Here amid ideal surroundings Mr. Crawford writes his books—"The writing table placed close to the opening in one of the chambers of the rocks; overhead great branches of flowering myrtle and yellow broom swing in the breeze; and from the Sorrento sea, swallows, dauntless creatures nearly as big as falcons, sweep in and out over the writer's head."

We have not space for further extracts from Mrs. Fraser's fascinating lecture: suffice it to say that the vote of thanks accorded her, on the motion of Mr. James Walter, at the close was of the heartiest description for she had given her audience an evening full of rare delights.

The lecture was repeated by kind permission of Sir Claude and Lady Macdonald at the British Embassy on Friday evening. The programme was as follows:—

Violin Solo....."Air" (on G. String).....Bach-Wilhelmy.
Miss Edna Ballagh.
"Marion Crawford, His Roman Life and Work."
(Part One.)
Mrs. Hugh Fraser.
Song ..... { "May Dreams" .....Paolo Tosti.
"Madrigal" .....Chaminade.
Mrs. Morton Grinnell. (Accompanied by Prof. Heydrich.)
Piano Solo ..... "Liebestraum" .....Liszt.
Miss Bessie Ballagh.
Song .. { "The Year's at the Spring,".....Cecile Hortog.
"La vie est vaine,".....Teresa del Riego.
Miss Lloyd Thomas.
"Marion Crawford, His Roman Life and Work."
(Part Two.)
Mrs. Hugh Fraser.
Violin Solo.....Berceuse from "Jocelyn,".....Godard.
2nd Mazurka .....Wieniawski.
Miss Edna Ballagh.
Song....."Myself when young did eagerly frequent"
Liza Lehmann.
Major Summerville.
Song....."La Serenata," with Violin and Piano accompaniment.....Braga.
Mrs. Morton Grinnell, Miss Edna Ballagh, and Miss Bessie Ballagh.
"God save the King."

THE KEIO-GIJIKU.

The first meeting of the Keio-gijiku College's English Speaking Society was held on the evenings of June 1st and 2nd. The programme was excellently carried out as follows:—

PART I.
Opening Address.....E. Kamada.
"All is Well that ends Well."
(By Prof. K. Takahashi.)
Scene I.—Student room in Dormitory.
Scene II.—Mita Street.
Scene III.—Sakura's villa at Dzushi.
Ohi Nochinaru .....K. Nishizawa.
Sakura Umeo .....H. Ozawa.
Kareki Munô .....F. Yoneyama.
Yamabuki Minashi .....F. Kozawa.
Columbus. (By Chauncey M. Depew).Y. Kobayashi.
"The Melon Thief." (Japanese kyogen, Translated by Prof. Yone Noguchi.)
Scene I.—Melon Garden.
Scene II.—Melon Garden.
The Garden owner .....M. Kubota.
The Melon thief .....I. Hashimoto.
PART II.
Music:
String Orchestra. Members of the Wagner Society.
(a.) Norma March.
(b.) Waltz.
The Tokyo Student. (By Prof. I. Hata.)
Scene.—The plain of Koganei.
Fujimura. (Student in love with Hana-ko.)
H. Suto.
Kojima. (Fujimura's friend disguised as a drunkard).....T. Nakamura.
Kudo. (Fujimura's friend disguised as a convalescing soldier).....T. Yamazaki.
Hana-ko. (Art student) .....R. Miyashita.

RUSSIA AND THE FAR EAST.

[WRITTEN FOR THE "JAPAN MAIL."]

St. Petersburg, April 9.

By the time this letter appears in the Japan Mail the world will know how the Russian elections have gone but at present all we know is that St. Petersburg has elected only Constitutional Democrats. The Liberals are unlikely, however, to have a triumph in the country districts like that which they have had in the capital but, even if they have a fair percentage in the Duma, the result will be bad for Russia's influence in the Far East. For the Liberals are strongly opposed to those Asiatic adventures which have drained their country of so much blood and money, and there is such a reaction against Imperialism in the minds of the Russian people that I do not think the loss of Finland, Poland and Eastern Siberia would be looked on by them as anything but a godsend, especially if it bought the Tchivooniks (officials) to their knees. The only references to the Far East which I heard during the election campaign are expressions of disgust and indignation. "Why did the Government occupy Manchuria?" asked Mr. Rodichoff, one of the stormiest orators of the left, and his answer, which was loudly applauded, was: "In order that it might find more places for Tchivooniks."

It is this feeling that the recent war was forced on Japan, that makes the liberals in Russia regard the Japanese with very friendly feelings. The average Russian has never in fact been an imperialist. He has never rejoiced in the diplomatic triumphs of his country at Peking and Teheran. He has been far too poor and too oppressed to do so. But there is a small, though influential section of the nation, composed principally of officers who want promotion and Tchivooniks who want "jobs" that used, up to three years ago, to be very proud of Russia's advance in Asia and very pleased when obsequious French papers compared it to the advance of a glacier. The change that has now come over that section of the population is enormous. They are very low-spirited, even unreasonably low-spirited. They go so far as to doubt if Russia can continue to hold Eastern Siberia. But after all, these fears are not so unreasonable as they might at first sight appear. Siberia is inhabited by two separate classes of people, one of whom is as bad as the other from the Tchivoonik's point of view,—one class the descendants of men who never were slaves, the other the descendants of men who were not only slaves but prisoners—political prisoners. A considerable number of these people would not be averse to cutting the connection with St. Petersburg altogether if the opportunity offered, and the present series of arrests and court-martials in Transbaikalia shows how volcanic is the foundation on which the Russian power, east of Baikal, is built.

Then the Russians are convinced that Japan will certainly wage war on them again when she has got enough money scraped together and has recovered sufficiently from the exhaustion of the last conflict. Professor Martens says that there never was a treaty so loosely drawn up as the Portsmouth Treaty and the general opinion here is that if at any time either of the parties to it wishes to pick a quarrel with the other, he can easily do so by alleging a breach of some clause of the Portsmouth Treaty. Article eleven, which concedes to the Japanese the right to fish along the Siberian coast, may lead to all kinds of misunderstandings. A writer in the Slovo quotes the Japanese paper Keisai as boasting of the rich fisheries of the sea of Okhotsk "where our fishermen now enjoy the same rights as the Russians," and also quotes a Russian Far Eastern paper, the Vladivostok Listok as saying that, even before the peace was ratified, Japanese fishermen had already begun operations in the Bay of Tadushii.

Russia's peculiar position in northern Manchuria may also lead to trouble. The Chinese Eastern railway, which unites Harbin with Vladivostok, cannot, strictly speaking, be used as a strategic line. In other words Japan can (so Russians fear) object to Russia sending a single soldier or sailor or pound of gunpowder by it to Vladivostok. And, in case Japan declares war, she can easily, owing to her being so near the scene of hostilities and to the fact that Russia cannot now keep an army north of the Siberian frontier, cut the Chinese Eastern Railway and isolate Vladivostok before Russia could do anything to prevent her. The great object of the Russians who are still interested in the Far East is, therefore, to construct an Amur railway which will enable them to dispense with the Chinese Eastern, but where the necessary money is to come from it is hard to say. Meanwhile China's activity in Mongolia and northern Manchuria is causing great uneasiness here. The Noroe Vremya speaks of Japan making warlike preparations, dismally recalls the fate of Poland, and writes tearfully of "quite Russian towns" like Blagoveschensk, Vladivostok, Khabarovsk and Chita being flooded in the near future with foreign traders owing probably to the opening of northern Manchuria. "From bitter experience we now know," it says, "what the Japanese trading factor means—that vanguard of the Japanese army, these spies, these scouts." In short, Russia sees that she is absolutely helpless in the Far East. And as a matter of fact, she is. A few years ago we were all talking about the break-up of China. To-morrow we may be watching the break-up of Russia.

And yet, though all this is very sad, for the Russian bureaucracy, it cannot be said that, from the standpoint of humanity in general it is at all regrettable. In the first place all who know Japan and have lived and worked in her (as the present writer has done) know that it is utterly absurd to even dream of Japan forcing a war on Russia. In the second place the new condition of things is making Russia get up and work. One cannot well lament because Russia cannot follow her dog-in-the-manger policy any longer. The Slovo weeps tears of blood when it sees, in imagination, enterprising Japanese ravaging the seal islands along the Siberian coast, but, after all, it is not the real Russian—the Muzhik,—who will suffer from this but a set of lazy and profligate nobles and Tchivooniks. Anyone who imagines that the Russian people are enriched by the extension of the Russian empire should enquire into the history of Bezobrazoff's timber concession on the Yalu. A Russian friend of mine who is taking part in the compilation of a large, non-political work of information concerning the Far East had occasion to write a lot about this concession, but in spite of the great latitude now allowed by the Censorate, his bald and truthful narration threw such a light on this episode that it was hastily rejected. I have at present got enough new material bearing on this old Yalu concession to enable me to write a fair-sized book, but for obvious reasons no London publisher would now look at anything touching even remotely on the Russo-Japanese war, and I daresay the Japan Mail entertains similar views. I have just remarked that Russia's military disasters during the past two years have been good for her, inasmuch as it now makes her get up and work. These disasters have not only brought the people liberty but they have acted as a powerful tonic on the Government.

"If we do not wish to descend into the ranks of the second-rate nations," writes Mr. Andrew Semenov in the Slovo, "we must now change in a fundamental manner many aspects of our national character. The natural conditions of our country require that the Russians be active, enterprising, practical and industrious. Up to the present we have made ourselves famous in the world by our artistic productions alone—our literature, music and paintings. We have also had successes in the domain of pure science. But all this is little. Let us now,—all of us without exception,—occupy ourselves with new activities. It is necessary for us to commence to face the problems of practical life. We ought to remember the fate of Poland and to consider seriously that now or never is the time for us to show that we are a great nation, a nation capable of life, a nation with a future."

And it must be admitted that Russia is now displaying a good deal of activity in north-eastern Siberia, a country which, had Russia won the late war, would have lain waste and unexplored perhaps for centuries to come, for the Japanese would have been afraid to enter it and the Russians would have been too busy exploiting other people's lands to pay much attention to it. The Japanese are said to be about to send a commercial expedition to examine the Siberian coast but Mr. Motono, when questioned on this matter, refused to give any answer in his official capacity, saying that his Legation "is not yet established." The Russians are certain, however, to send two expeditions to Kamchatka next year. One, an overland expedition, is financed by one of the merchant princes of Moscow, the other, which is headed by a well-known explorer called Schmidt, will go by sea along the northern coast of Siberia and will spend several years on the trip. Some of the best scientists in Russia will accompany these expeditions and Mr. Schmidt will see if it is at all possible for Russia, by carefully charting the coast and establishing coaling stations, to send war-ships or transports to the Far East by the northern route.

Meanwhile a French traveller, Mr. de Lobel, has come here with a scheme for the construction of a railway from the centre of Siberia to Behring's Straits, the idea of the American syndicate which he represents being to run a tunnel under the straits and continue the line through Alaska so that one could, if he liked, travel by land from Paris to Washington. His syndicate wants the exclusive right to exploit the land and the minerals contained in the land for a distance of twelve kilometres on each side of the railway. That right of exclusive exploitation would cease at the end of ninety years and the Russian Government would have the right to buy the line thirty years after the beginning of the exploitation. A majority of the workmen would be Russian.

The Tchivooniks from Port Arthur and Manchuria who are now swarming in St. Petersburg are enthusiastically in favour of this scheme which would, they think, get all of them new and snug billets but the Imperial Council, the Railway Department and the newspapers are against it, being tired of railway building in Siberia and being convinced that in this instance, it might lead to complications with the nation which had advanced the money for the line. For, incredible as it may seem, the Russian bureaucrats count America as well as China and Japan among the dangers to Siberia.

FUNERAL OF MR. PET. PEACOCK.

The mortal remains of Mr. Peter Peacock, M.V.O., were consigned to the grave on Saturday afternoon in the presence of a very large assemblage of mourners. The British Ambassador and Lady McDonald were among those who followed the coffin, the staff of the Embassy were also present, as well as Mr. Hobart Hampden and the members of the Consulate-General, and representatives from other diplomatic and consular bodies. The coffin, which was covered with beautiful flowers and bore the deceased's decoration above his breast, was taken from the General Hospital shortly before 5.30 p.m. and conveyed in the hearse to Christ Church where the first part of the funeral service was performed by the Rev. W. P. G. Field assisted by the Rev. L. B. Cholmondeley, Chaplain of the Embassy. Thereafter a procession was formed and the hearse proceeded to the cemetery, where the Rev. Mr. Cholmondeley pronounced the closing words at the grave side, and brought the affecting ceremony to an end. Many very beautiful wreaths were sent, including tributes from the various Consulates in Japan and one from the Nippon Race Club.

The chief mourners were the son and daughter of the deceased and the pall-bearers were: Dr. E. Wheeler, Messrs. R. J. Ward, J. E. Beale, J. L. O. Eyton, Geo. Hodges, Robert Hay, S. E. Unite, J. B. Coulson and W. N. Wright.

Among the senders of floral tributes were: the British Embassy staff; Sir Claude and Lady McDonald; the Attaches of the Embassy; the British Consulates at Nagasaki and Shimonoseki and the Consulate-General at Yokohama; British officers stationed in Japan; Mr. and Mrs. R. Ward and many other residents.

The ensigns of the British Naval Depot and the British Naval Hospital were half-masted during the ceremony.

THE INTERPORT REGATTA.

The Spring, which was also the Interport, Regatta of the Yokohama Amateur Rowing Club took place on Saturday afternoon and the large number of spectators, including many ladies on the Boat House verandah, who watched the events, were doubtless much pleased with them. The day was fine, not too sunny and the water over the course, if a little troubled off the Creek, was generally speaking all that could be wanted. Interest, of course, centred in the interport contests and undoubtedly Yokohama received a facer in the Fours. We had ventured, without seeing the Kobe crew afloat, on the prediction that this first race would be close, and the opinion was more than strengthened by the appearance of the crews as they went away from the pontoon. Small as such indications may be when boats are going off leisurely to their stations, it was impossible to avoid notice of Kobe's alertness and the pretty swing, under which the boat moved very fast. In the result the visitors simply rowed Yokohama down. In the Interport Double Sculls Kobe steered badly throughout but Yokohama assumed the lead at once and kept it without effort to the end. The Interport Pairs fell to Kobe rather easily, the visitors going strong till they got the gun, while Yokohama were visibly uncomfortable.

The official duties were undertaken by the following gentlemen:—Judge, Mr. H. C. Litchfield; Starter, Mr. F. J. Hall; Time-keeper, Mr. Cyril Allen; Pontoon officials: Messrs. A. L. Robinson, B. J. Jackson, and O. Strome.

Appended are details of the various events (the Roman figures denoting the positions, I. being the inside boat):—

Yokohama was the slower in getting away, losing half a length at the start. At the first quarter Kobe had obtained a lead of a length and continued to increase until at the P. M. Wharf a distance of four lengths separated the two boats. The Kobe men were still going strong, but Yokohama showed signs of distress. The visitors added to their lead, and won by about six lengths in 9m. 33 <sup>4</sup>/<sub>5</sub>s.

The prizes were distributed to the successful competitors by Mrs. Fred. Pollard.

ANNUAL MEETING OF THE AMERICAN BOARD MISSION.

The thirty-fourth Annual Meeting of the Japan Mission of the American Board was held in Arima, May 24th to 30th. The attendance was large, all but four members of the Mission now in Japan being present. Reports from all localities in which the members of the Mission are co-operating were given and the usual routine business was transacted.

Among the most encouraging features made evident by all reports were the increasing evangelistic activity of the Japanese Christians and their determined endeavor to build better and larger churches, even in the face of crippled conditions following the war. Several appeals for aid were presented by such churches; and, as a result, that the Mission might show its spirit of Brotherly co-operation, an arrangement was entered upon whereby Kumiai Churches needing aid in building may be assisted to a slight degree by the personal gifts of those thus uniting.

The key-note of the Meeting was efficient co-operation in evangelization. The Editor of the Annual Report noted that "many changes in the method of mission work are rapidly being brought about. The methods which were necessary, and the only ones which could be employed in the beginning of the work and until very recent years are no longer suitable. The time for 'extra-territorial' Christianity in Japan is rapidly drawing to an end if it has not already passed."

Apart from routine business, thought centered upon the question of the Mission's relation to the Kumiai community which, in its church organization, has now bravely undertaken full and complete self-support. Attention was called to the fact that, because the Mission had cordially co-operated with the churches in this undertaking, relations could not be more cordial than at present, both as between individuals and organizations; and that the foundation for future relations was sincere and cordial co-operation with enthusiasm for the progress of Japanese Christianity, in which all distinctions of native and foreign should disappear with disappearance of all "extra-territorial" methods. This spirit became apparent in the consideration of the question of creating a Board of Managers for Kobe College. An entire morning was spent in a committee of the whole, when it became clearly evident that it was the desire and purpose of the Mission to enter upon a new era of co-operation in that school. Heretofore the College has been conducted by its faculty, advised by a Mission Committee and subject to the ultimate control of the Woman's Board of Missions of the Interior. During the Meeting in Arima a Constitution for a "Board of Managers of Kobe College" was adopted, subject to the approval of the W.B.M.I. This provides for union representation upon the Board of Managers, and will secure far greater efficiency in the school through the assistance of the Alumnae. It is believed to be a step whereby, through the gradual association of the Alumnae and friends of the School in its management, it may be prepared for that ultimate complete Japanese control which is desirable.

Tottori Station, which for some time has been closed because of lack of workers, was, upon the urgent appeal of the church in that city, reopened. Rev. and Mrs. Bennett, now in Okayama, were asked to reside in Tottori; and for one year Miss De Forest and Mrs. Walker may accompany them.

In view of the union movement in the States, as well as in the interests of closer co-operation here, it was voted to invite the United Brethren and the Methodist Protestant Missions to send Fraternal Delegates to the next Annual Meeting.

On Friday evening, the Mission Church held its Annual Meeting. As some criticism had been brought against the existence of a Mission Church composed of Americans resident in Japan, attention was called to the fact that the organization was and is largely for the sake of the Mission children who through it receive a Christian nurture which would be difficult to secure for them in association with Japanese churches only; and further that the members of the Mission are entirely free to unite with Japanese churches as full or associate members as may appear best in individual cases, there being nothing in the mind of the church or Mission to oppose such action.

Among the great pleasures of the meeting was the presence of Rev. Mr. Hori of Maebashi, and Rev. Mr. Harada of Kobe. Both addressed the meeting. Mr. Hori spoke in the interests of the Maebashi work; and Mr. Harada gave an interesting and instructive address in English upon his Impressions in India. F. A. L.

THE LAW COURTS

ALLEGED EMBEZZLEMENT.

The trial of Yamamoto Soichi, formerly an employee of Messrs A. Oestmann and Co., No. 76, Yokohama, who is charged with having embezzled some thirty thousand yen belonging to the firm while in their employment, took place on June 1st in the Yokohama District Court before Judge Satomi and Public Procurator Miki.

The contention of the accused was that he was not an employee of Messrs. Oestmann and Co. but a merchant patronized by the firm. He sold several lots of drugs to Ogura, and other dealers of Tokyo, on behalf of Messrs. Oestmann and Co. In the course of the business he sustained loss on account of the inferior quality of the chemicals. The loss amounted to the sum which he was prosecuted for having embezzled. As the business was done on his own account, the loss should be regarded as a debt owed by the accused to Messrs. Oestmann and Co. Debt could not be dealt with under the Penal Law.

Mr. Bannermann of Messrs. Oestmann and Co. was examined as a witness in the criminal case. He said that Yamamoto was an employee of the firm. The accused was a banto for selling imported merchandise. The price of the goods was always arranged by his employers. Being shown a letter and two promissory notes, by the Court, witness said that a lot of drugs was sold to Mr. Ogura, a merchant of Tokyo. The Japanese dealer being unable to pay on delivery of the merchandise, issued two promissory notes which were discounted by the Asahi Shokai. Previous to the payment by the Asahi Shokai to Messrs Oestmann & Co., the Murai Bank of Tokyo asked witness by telephone whether he made an endorsement to the notes issued by Ogura.

Being examined by the Public Procurator, witness stated that before the delivery of the goods, Ogura asked witness firm for payment to be made within sixty days. The firm refused the request, consequently the purchaser issued the promissory notes, which were discounted by the Asahi Shokai at interest of two hundred and fifty yen. The Asahi Shokai, however, issued two promissory notes covering the amount of the notes received from Ogura. The notes of the Asahi Shokai were transferred to Messrs. Oestmann and Co. The notes were received by the accused on behalf of the firm.

Examined by the Accused's Counsel, witness said that he did not know whether the drafts issued by the Asahi Shokai were addressed to the accused. After the enquiry of the Murai Bank by telephone, witness met Ogura at the Yuraku-ken Hotel, Tokyo, where the accused was also present. His intention at the meeting was to receive money from Ogura or to take back the goods delivered.

After the examination, the Public Procurator and Counsel addressed the Court, which decided to give judgment on June 3rd.

THE NOGUCHI MURDER CASE.

Takebayashi Osaburo, who was recently sentenced in the Tokyo District Court to death and lodged an appeal against the judgment, withdrew his appeal on June 4th. The appeal by the Public Procurator, however, will be heard in the near future.

It is said that Mr. T. Hanai, one of Counsel employed for the defence, paid a visit to Takebayashi on June 2nd in the Tokyo Prison. The lawyer explained the decision given by Judge Inamura and said he regarded it as just. He then advised him to withdraw the appeal.

THE RECENT DISTURBANCES.

The first trial of Nishikawa and twenty other socialists who are charged with having created a disturbance on March 11th and 15th at the Hibiya Park, Tokyo, and with having made an attack on the office of the Tokyo Street Electric Company, took place on June 4th in the Tokyo District Court before Judge Ito, and Public Procurator Aoki.

Mr. T. Hanai and seven other lawyers were employed for the defence.

At the outset of the examination, the public Procurator said that all the accused were devoted to socialism and aimed at bringing about community in property. When the three electric railway companies of Tokyo proposed to raise their fares and asked for the consent of the city authorities, the accused opposed the proposal. They instigated a mass meeting at Hibiya Park and excited the public to attack the office of the Tokyo Street Electric Railway Co.

M. Nishikawa stated that he was one of the standing committee of the Nippon Socialists. The party was opposed to the proposals of the three electric companies. On March 11th, he organized a meeting in the park and subsequently he and his followers carrying red-flags, which is the symbol of the party, proceeded to the front of the offices of the Tokyo Street Electric Co., and some of the newspapers. There the accused made speeches opposing the increase of fares. On March 15th the party held another meeting in the park. Subsequently the crowd proceeded to the City Hall and asked the Assembly not to give consent to the proposal of the railway companies. The accused and his followers did not adopt any violent measures although there were allegations that the crowd had made a disturbance.

T. Oka said that he was present at the meeting held on March 15th. He proceeded to the City Assembly in company with the crowd. On their way the accused saw some people attack the electric carriages by throwing stones. He requested his followers not to pursue such riotous behavior.

Y. Yamaguchi and some other socialists were examined, their statements being similar to the foregoing.

The Court showed M. Yoshikawa, one of the accused, a placard which was alleged to have been found in the park while the meeting was going on. It stated that the members of the Tokyo City Assembly and some of the newspapers were bought by the electric railway companies as the latter's organs. These organs assisted the companies in achieving their intention to raise the fare, which measure would be opposed to the public interest. The placard concluded by saying that another meeting would be held on March 18th in the same park. On this occasion the public who sympathized with the demonstration were requested to bring matches and a quantity of kerosene-oil. The accused said that he wrote the placard. He, however, had no special purpose in drawing it up. Twelve others of the accused were also examined.

They denied being socialists. Some admitted that they had attacked the electric carriages but others denied participating in the riot.

The next hearing will take place to-day, June 6th.

MURDER CASE.

The alleged murder case of Miss Kaku Abe (18) a teacher of the Shinoda Primary School, Tochigi prefecture, by a Buddhist priest named K. Tasaki (26) was removed from the Mito District Court to the Tokyo Appeal Court on June 5th.

Further details as to the affair are reported. It appears that the priest met the lady at 7 p.m., on Sept. 9th from the village of Kawama, in Manabe district and assaulted her. He then inflicted fatal injuries with a knife. Subsequently the murderer was arrested and examined in the Mito District Court. At the trial, Dr. Katayama, a professor of the College of Medicine, was summoned as an expert as to the health of the accused. Witness stated that the man was suffering from disease at the time. The accused, was accordingly acquitted under Art. 78 of the Penal Code, which provides exemption from penalty when a person is deprived of reason. The Public Procurator, however, appealed against this acquittal on May 23rd.

In the Yokohama District Court, judgment was given on June 7th in the criminal case brought against S. Yamamoto, formerly an employee of Oestmann and Co., who was charged with having embezzled a large amount of money belonging to the firm while employed by them.

1.—The Court sentenced the accused to two years' imprisonment with hard labour.

2.—He was exempted from the change of having forged some drafts, on the ground that the evidence was insufficient.

3.—The accused was ordered to pay to Messrs. Oestmann and Co., the plaintiffs in a civil suit connected with the criminal case, yen 12,557.03 which he had embezzled from the firm.

4.—The Court dismissed another claim—a thousand yen—of the plaintiffs against a geisha named Ishi. This amount had been given by the accused to her. She is alleged to have deposited the money in a savings bank.

THE HONGWAN-JI CASE.

The case instituted by G. Kimura against the Buddhist temple Hongwan-ji, Kyoto, claiming yen 260,400 which has been under examination for many years past, was brought up again on June 5th in the Kyoto District Court. This time, it was a counter-suit filed by Count Otani, Lord Abbot, and three other high priests of the temple, and three of the committee consisting of the representatives belonging to the temples. The petition says that the temple borrowed the amount claimed. For the debt, none of the representatives of the parishioners gave any endorsement on promissory notes issued by the temple. According to notification No. 43, issued in 1877, continued the representatives of the temple, a debt could not be considered legal unless endorsed by more than two of the committee of the temple. Consequently, the claim by G. Kimura could not be dealt with by the Court and further the contract of the debt should be declared null and void.

THE RECENT DISTURBANCES.

The second hearing of the charge against Nishikawa and twenty other socialists who are charged with having created a disturbance on March 11th and 15th at the Hibiya Park, Tokyo, and with having made an attack on the office of the Tokyo Streets Electric Company, took place on June 7th in the Tokyo District Court before Judge Ito, and Public Procurator Aoki.

Evidence was led after which counsel for the defence asked the Court for leave to summon Mr. T. Sakai, a socialist, and ten others including five police, as witnesses. The Court decided to examine them on June 15th.

MARRIAGE IN TOKYO.

Trinity Cathedral was crowded on June 2nd, when the marriage of Mr. Richard Percy Smith, of Messrs. Dick Kerr & Co., London, to Miss Agnes Ada Summers, daughter of the late Prof. James Summers, of King's College, London, was solemnized. The ceremony was performed by the Rt. Rev. Bishop McKim. The bride, who was beautifully attired in embroidered duchesse satin, was attended by her sisters Misses Lily, Margaret and Alice. The bridesmaids' gowns were dainty creations of blue chiffon and net and they wore picture-hats to match and carried shower bouquets of pink roses. The bride was given away by her brother, Mr. Vincent Summers, of Messrs. Samuel Samuel & Co. Mr. H. Rice, of Messrs. Dick Kerr & Co., acted as best man, and Messrs. W. M. Booth and J. N. Strong were the groomsmen. Messrs. L. Römisch, E. R. Thompson and S. Clarke acted as ushers. Mrs. Field, of Yokohama, effectively rendered Mendelssohn's Wedding March and the Misses Blundell of Yokohama assisted in the choir. After the ceremony the bridal party drove to the bride's home, where a reception was held. Later in the afternoon the happy couple left for Yokohama en route for Europe. The wedding presents were numerous and most handsome.

YOKOHAMA YACHT CLUB.

Races for the 26 and 21-raters and Larks took place on Saturday afternoon. The two former sailed around the Widow Buoy Course.

Two yachts started in the 29-rater class, Elsa and Valkyrien. The latter gave up, and Elsa was in any case disqualified for taking a man on board after the first gun.

Five boats, Aimée, Edna, Winsome, Pele and Sunbeam, started in the 21-raters. Aimée won this race easily, Edna being second and Winsome a close third. A foul has been alleged against Edna.

Three boats, Nos. 11, 13 and 14 started in the Lark class. No. 11 won.

PLAGUE.

A new case of plague was reported on May 30th at Hiroshima.

A new case of plague was reported in Yamaguchi prefecture on June 2nd.

On June 4th, a new case of plague was reported in Hiroshima.

The governor of Okinawa prefecture (Lu-chu islands) reports that on June 3rd four cases of plague appeared in the village of Onno.

Two new cases of the same disease were reported on June 4th in Kobe. One of the patients has since died.

On June 5th, an old woman residing in the village of Yumi near Hiroshima, was attacked by plague.

One case each of plague was reported on June 5th in Osaka and Kobe.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

Prince Nakonchaisi arrived at Tientsin on June 5th from Manchuria via Shanhaikwan. On June 8th he will leave for Peking.

According to a telegram which the Yokohama Raw Silk Co received on June 6th, the sericultural outlook in Italy and France is very promising. The crop will be larger than last year.

Capt de Oliveira Sampaio, of the Brazilian Legation, Tokyo, has been transferred as Naval Attaché to the Brazilian Legation in London, and will leave Yokohama next Saturday by the German steamer Preussen.

It is reported by the Hochi that the Tokyo Electric Railway and two other companies have agreed to amalgamate. The three electric railway companies were to hold general meetings on June 5th with a view to obtaining the approval of the shareholders.

The King Alfred, the flagship of Vice-Admiral Moore, and his squadron in China waters, are expected to arrive at Kagoshima on June 9th. The citizens are making preparations to welcome the ships. The fleet will stay for five days after which it will leave for Nagasaki.

A telegram from London has been received in Tokyo to the effect that Messrs Colbran and Co., of Seoul have issued a prospectus for a loan of two million yen for the purpose of establishing water-works in the Korean capital. Some subscriptions were offered but ultimate success is not hopeful.

Twelve Japanese merchants who were detained by the Russians at Vladivostok on suspicion of being spies arrived at Tsuruga on June 6th by the steamer Kotsu Maru. They had been released through the efforts of Mr. Kawakami, Japanese commercial agent, who recently arrived at his post.

A St. Petersburg telegram received by the Russian periodical Volia, Nagasaki, says that with regard to the amnesty demanded by the Duma the Minister for Education intends to issue pardons to students who were discharged from various government institutes on account of political offences.

On the evening of June 6th, Saku (39) the wife of a dealer in embroidery named Y. Iida, residing at Matsukage-cho, Shichome, Yokohama, attempted to commit suicide by cutting her throat with a razor. She was at once removed to the office of a doctor near by. As to the cause, it is reported by the Kotobuki-cho police that the couple quarreled over monetary matters the previous day and subsequently the husband proposed a divorce.

The Lucia Vittoria is ashore at Russian Island, near Vladivostok. This steamer, which was formerly H. M. S. Humber, belongs to Messrs. V. D. Musso and Company, of Hongkong, and stranded on the island during a dense fog. She is expected to become a total loss. The Lucia Vittoria left Hongkong on May 5th with a general cargo for the northern port and has apparently grounded sixteen miles from her destination. The vessel was built in 1878 as a storeship for H. M. Navy.

The Nippon Marine Society held a general meeting at 2 p.m. on June 5th in the compound of the College of Marine. Princes Arisugawa and Kuni were present. Prince Arisugawa in the course of a speech eulogized the enterprise leading to the purchase and equipment of volunteer ships and he hoped for further progress for the sake of the national defence. Admiral Arichi, President, replied saying that all the members were resolved on achieving successfully the purpose of the Society. Mr. I. Yamagata, Minister for Communications, gave an address after which the ceremony concluded.

The Togo, a small whaler, built in Norway for a Japanese company, arrived in Hongkong on May 23rd after a voyage of 54 days. The vessel is 96 feet long, 17 feet beam, with a draft of 13 feet, and is 23 tons net register. She carries 38 tons of coal in her bunkers, sufficient for 7 3/4 days steaming and on the voyage out had to coal at the following ports, Portland, Algiers, Port Said, Aden, Colombo and Singapore. Her crew consists of five Norwegians and five Asiatics who speak well of the vessel's behaviour at sea. After coaling in Hongkong she leaves for Nagasaki, where she is to be handed over to her owners. The Chief Officer, who is the gunner, is to remain with her and he states they are going to search for the small species of whale called devil fish.

The British battleship Montagu, the stranding of which is announced, bears a name of historic record. A predecessor was in the battle off Lowestoft in 1665 when the Dutch were defeated and a remnant of them took shelter in the Texel, and a vessel of this name was with the Barfleur and La Hogue, in the capture of Gibraltar, the battle off Cape Passaro, the attack on Cartagena, the fight in Quiberon Bay and so on to Rodney's and Hood's actions with le Grasse, up to the Glorious First of June and Camperdown. Captain Adair, her commander, was Lieut. of the Orion during the Egyptian War in 1882, was employed with the naval flotilla on the Sweet-water Canal, was Assistant to the Director of Naval Ordnance from March, 1894, to March, 1895, and was a member of the Ordnance Committee.

Extraordinary volcanic disturbances in Iceland are reported. When one compares these reports with those that preceded the eruptions of Askja Hekla during the last century one must conclude, writes a scientific expert, that this seems to be the beginning of one of the great convulsions of nature to which Iceland is so subject. The greatest eruption on earth within historical times was that of 1785 in Southern Iceland. The mass of lava then ejected has been computed by Lyell to have been equal in cubic volume to Mont Blanc. Nearly one half of the cattle and sheep of the island and a large number of the population perished. It is to be hoped that the present eruption may be confined to the uninhabited parts of the island. It acts as a safety valve to the British Isles, for a volcanic rift stretches from Edinburgh to Iceland. Eruptions in Iceland have frequently synchronised with those of Etna or Vesuvius.

CORRESPONDENCE.

HYPNOTISM.

(TO THE EDITOR OF THE "JAPAN MAIL.")

SIR,—In one of the Japanese papers this morning there is an article on the subject of hypnotism. It mentions a report that recently abuses resulting from the use of hypnotism have been considerable, and that the necessity for an investigation has been suggested. At the same time the paper gives a report of an interview with two well-known men in which their views on the above question are given. The views of both of these men, however, appear to be vague and undecided. One of them admits that more or less truth is done by the practice of hypnotism by other than medical men; but neither of them sees any special need for an investigation of the abuses.

Now, Sir, as one who has given considerable study to this question, I take the liberty to differ from the latter conclusion. It is true that the number of people practising hypnotism at present is not large. In fact the majority of people—perhaps fortunately—do not even believe that it is possible. At the same time, however, I am in a position to know that it is spreading quite rapidly in Japan. It is only a few weeks ago that in a certain Japanese house, I saw a student hypnotize a young Japanese maid servant. I carefully observed the stage that she had reached; and it was clear that she was as helpless in his hands as any automaton. Now if it is thus possible for a person to completely dominate the will of another—and it certainly is,—scarcely to the contrary notwithstanding—then one would think there was a very decided need for investigation.

It is not, however, so much the abuse of the post-hypnotic condition by unscrupulous persons to which I wish particularly to refer, as that is sufficiently obvious; but rather to the practice of hypnotism per se.

This practice in the hands of skilled and conscientious investigators is one thing; the indiscriminate dabbling of amateurs, however, is quite another. In the case of the former, as all careful students of the subject know, remarkable results have been obtained,—results which clearly indicate the enormous mysteries of the human individuality or soul which remain to be explored. Some writer has suggested that as with some light, round object floating in water, only a comparatively small part is below the surface,—so in the case of man, only a small part of him is represented as the man we recognize. These depths within, which certain psychologists are giving their attention to, are at present practically unsuspected of the average man, not merely in the case of others but also of his own self; though in certain states of consciousness he is nearer to them than in others. To put it in another way, man, in his higher aspects, is an infinitely more complex being than he is ordinarily aware of.

Now in so far as hypnotic experiments have aided or may further aid in the development of this higher psychology—which most psychologists fight shy of at present—it will have served a useful purpose, whatever its effects on the neuropathic subjects experimented upon. It is, however, in the very fact that hypnotism has to do with these subtle realms of man's nature that the need for the greatest caution lies. Dabbling in hypnotism, as so many do, merely as something curious and amusing, is like poking a knife blade or a nail into the delicate mechanism of a watch. Curious things are not unlikely to happen; but the watch will not thereafter be quite the reliable time piece that it was before. The will—the very essence of the man—has been impaired.

On the other hand it may be urged that the knowledge of this sub-conscious terra incognita can be extended only by means of such experiments, just as the knowledge of the body we are familiar with had to be gained by experiments often painful and often fatal to the subjects thereof. Quite so. Experiments will no doubt continue to be made whether rightly or wrongly; and what were regarded almost as the superstitions of one age will become the science of the next. Such experiments, however, should as far as possible be entrusted to persons trained and qualified to conduct them.

We do not allow every Tom, Dick and Harry to experiment on the ordinary physical anatomy just for the fun of it, and yet I know several parents who have allowed their children to be experimented upon by hypnotists merely out of curiosity to see what would happen. The trouble is that whereas in the first case the physical mischief done would be seen at once; in the second case the mischief though more dangerous is not immediately apparent. The fact, however, that in America and elsewhere scores of moral wrecks are left in the wake of professional hypnotists is making it more and more apparent at least to those who have taken the trouble to investigate.

In conclusion I would like to add that I have written this letter impersonally and from a sense of duty. It would take volumes to go into all the ins and outs of the subject, and therefore I do not desire to enter into any newspaper controversy about it. I can only say that what I have written I am fully convinced of, and if it has the effect of causing any one to pause and think twice before subjecting himself, or still less his children, to hypnotism, it will have served its purpose.

Yours respectfully, CAVENDO TUTUS.

THE WEALTH OF JAPAN AND TAXATION.

(TO THE EDITOR OF THE "JAPAN MAIL.")

SIR,—In a recent leader entitled "The Wealth of Japan and Taxation," the Japan Mail criticises the Keizai Zasshi's estimates of the relative weight of taxation in Japan. The Mail expresses surprise "at the looseness of the methods employed." But it seems to me that, however much the Keizai Zasshi may err, the Mail's statements do not accord with facts.

Pointing out the failure of the Keizai Zasshi to distinguish between direct and indirect imposts, between taxes and state revenue, the Mail says: "the figure for the national burden becomes 233 millions, instead of 298½." Now, taxes are taxes, whether they be direct or indirect. It is a mere matter of convenience whether they be taken directly or indirectly. In both cases, the people must pay them, and every estimate of tax burdens must include both direct and indirect taxes. At most, it might be argued that exporters, hence foreigners, pay a part of the customs duties, and that such part should not be included in the national burdens.

Then, according to Budget estimates, Japan's national taxes for 1906 are 250.98 million yen. Again, there are separately classified 27.3 million yen of stamp duties, which are also taxes—the greater part being consumption tax on textiles. Finally, under the revenues from State Industries and Properties, there are large sums which are really taxes—notably the whole 26.27 million yen from Salt Monopoly and a large proportion of the 30.3 million yen Tobacco Monopoly revenues. If under this head we take the low estimate of 40 million yen as really taxes—it is probably more nearly 50 millions—and add together the several sums indicated, we have national taxes of (250.98 plus 27.3 plus 40) 318½ million yen. To this, add the 51 million yen given by the Mail as local taxes and the aggregate tax burdens of the Japanese people become 369½ million yen. (Local taxes in fact amount to about 80 million yen, and so the total should be 398 million yen.) Even, if you suppose that foreigners paid the whole sum of customs duties, there would remain at least 339 million yen taxes for Japanese to pay, not counting any customs duties and counting some 29 million yen of local taxes which the Mail overlooks. This estimate therefore seems to me the most optimistic that could with any semblance of truth be made.

Again, Mail says:—

"Without going into details, it is not quite obvious that there must be some gross mistake in a calculation which represents the people as paying nearly one-half of their income to the tax-collector? Is that confirmed by the experience of any one of us, and would it not be much nearer the truth to say that we pay one-twentieth of our incomes at the outside? Observe the arithmetical result of the Keizai's conclusions. They indicate that a man with an income of 5,000 yen yearly pays at least 2,000 yen in taxes. He does nothing of the kind; nothing at all approximating to that. Even a payment of 250 yen, or one-twentieth of his income would be above the average."

Unfortunately, this is not a question of a priori reasoning, but one of fact. We must therefore go into details in order to see the truth. In fact, the law says that an income of 5,000 yen shall pay income tax to the Imperial Government equal to 6 per cent. of income and to the local governments within the limits of ¼ of 1 per cent., i.e. ⅓ of 2.5 per cent. making a total of 6¾ per cent. The local rates assessed in Tokyo last year made the actual rate about 6.7 per cent., or 355 yen income tax on the 5,000 yen income. If this 5,000 yen family income support one jinrikisha and two bicycles, nearly 25 yen taxes for them is added. A carriage would be much more heavily taxed, and there is a dog tax for those who have pets. Then there are the stamp duties on checks, receipts, notes, etc.; also 1 sen, 3 sen, 5 sen, or 50 sen communications taxes for every ride on tram or rail or boat. Now, all of these are direct taxes, and the family with 5,000 yen yearly will be lucky if together they do not take more than 400 yen.

How much of the remaining 4,600 yen goes for taxes must depend on the way in which it is used. If our family spend it all, then taxes will take of the sums spent respectively: for cotton, silk and woolen clothing, curtains, etc., 10—50 per cent.; for imported foods 15—50 per cent.; for sugar 20—40 per cent.; for kerosene 50 per cent.; for tobacco 250 per cent. House rent must include a considerable sum for land and building taxes—payable direct in case of proprietorship—which should really be added to the direct taxes. But, if part of the 4,600 yen be saved, it will come in for taxes: heavy registration taxes, stamp taxes, exchange taxes and at death succession taxes. It is hardly conceivable that the 4,600 yen would be disposed of without paying at least 12 per cent. in taxes. It is conceivable that it might be used in ways that would cause 30—40 per cent. of it to go as taxes. If so, there would be a possible 552—1840 yen to add to the first 400 yen taxes, and the total taxes on our 5,000 yen income might range anywhere from 952 up to 2,240 yen. The only alternative I can see is to evade the law and leave so much more to be paid by others.

It seems to me that the final argument in the Mail's leader—that which estimates the national wealth of Japan at something like 68 thousand millions,—is still more loose and untrustworthy than those already considered. We have no more right to assume that 170 million yen of direct taxes represents one-twentieth of the national income than we have to assume that it represents one-fifth or one-hundredth of that income. Until we have trustworthy facts to show the ratio of such taxes to the total national income, it is fruitless to argue this point. Meanwhile, the curious fact is, that the Mail, by reversing the logical process of the Keizai Zasshi, gets results no whit less surprising than those of the Keizai Zasshi—results which the Mail would show to be absurd. For, the Keizai Zasshi argues from an unverified sum of national wealth to what seems to the Mail an absurd ratio of taxation; whereas the Mail argues from an absurd sum of national wealth. Either process of reasoning might teach us much, but only if we begin with a basis of fact.

In these matters, it seems better to keep an "open mind" than to build on error. The people's tax burdens cannot be made lighter and Japan's problems cannot be simplified by self-delusion. By confusing our light, we usually stray further from the true way. Believing that the Mail and its readers seek only the truth, I deem it a dutiful service to put this subject in the light as it appears to me. If my light is bad or confused, I shall be grateful for better light.

Faithfully yours,

E. H. VICKERS.

A NEW VERSION OF THE SCRIPTURES.

(TO THE EDITOR OF THE "JAPAN MAIL.")

SIR,—In The Monthly Summary of the Religious Press, in the last issue of The Weekly Mail, the writer, reproducing an article from the Fukuin Shimpō, makes the following statement:—

"The proposal made to the Alliance that the two Bible Societies be asked to take the lead in the preparation and publication of a new version of the Scriptures seems to have originated from Dr. D. C. Greene."

This statement is due to an unaccountable misunderstanding. So far as my influence goes it has been used strongly in favour of the organisation of a Japanese Committee independent of the Bible Societies, a committee which, if it desires the assistance of foreigners, shall obtain it without the sacrifice of its proper leadership. In my judgment a version proposed under such an arrangement by a well chosen committee, would be far better on the whole than one prepared by a committee hampered by the restrictions which are almost certain to result from accepting the leadership of the Bible Societies.

While second to none in my appreciation of the work of the Bible Societies in Japan, I do not think their assistance in this movement is essential or even desirable.

In this, as in every other department of Christian work, I believe most heartily in the wisdom of a frank and full recognition of the right of the Japanese Christians to control the development of their own institutions; and it is a great satisfaction to know that there is no lack of men in the Christian community who are fitted by temperament and education for such leadership.

I remain yours, &c,

D. C. GREENE.

AN ETHICAL POINT OF VIEW.

(TO THE EDITOR OF THE "JAPAN MAIL.")

SIR,—A few days ago I came across a small magazine called Osanago devoted to Christian propaganda. Curious to know how Christian teachings looked in Japanese dress I read it. The effect of reading familiar things in a foreign language is sometimes rather surprising. In order to give an idea of the effect in common Japanese I have roughly translated one incident back again into common English without referring to the original, as follows:—

In ancient times when the prophet Erihiya was on his way up to a place called Beteru, a lot of mischievous children came out from a village and ridiculed him.

"Bald head, go up . . . Bald head, go up" they cried.

Erihiya infuriated at this, cursed the children in the name of his god. Then suddenly two bears came out of a wood and attacking the little children, tore forty-two of them to pieces.

Now as this historical incident was evidently translated and published for the purpose of moral instruction, I thought it would be worth while to find out just what effect this recital would have on a Japanese hearing it for the first time. That is quite fair I think. I have no intention of attacking any religion which may be honestly believed in by anyone. I merely record the facts as I found them. My little experiment may be useful in showing that often teachings which are regarded as moral and elevating by one people are regarded as quite otherwise by another.

I asked a number of Japanese, including students and old people who had never heard it before, to carefully read and consider this story in all its bearings and then to let me know their opinion about it. One and all of them expressed indignation. "It's a horrible story." . . . "One could not worship such a god or respect such a fiendish prophet." "Why didn't he reason with the children and correct them kindly?" "Did he stand quietly there and see little children torn limb from limb before his very eyes without lifting a hand to help or to save them?" He was not a man much less a prophet,—he must have been a fiend."

This is the light in which one and all regarded the story. Some expressed themselves even more strongly.

Now the point I wish to make is this—and I think it is an important one:—that this story was deliberately selected, translated and published in an ostensibly ethical magazine as if there were nothing questionable about it. On the contrary: as if it were quite the natural and proper thing for a prophet or a god to do. That is the point which I refer to. The incident itself has been otherwise sufficiently criticised already. If such a shocking incident had happened in Japanese history, would Japanese be likely to translate and publish it in England as an ethical warning likely to be of benefit to English children?

And how should we regard it if they did so? That is what we should try to do: to put ourselves in the other person's place and try to see things from his point of view. Many Christian propagandists, however, appear to be all too ready to criticise Japanese ancestor worship (as they call it) and Japanese ethical conceptions of all kinds without giving a questioning thought to ethical conceptions of their own. I do not say that criticism may not be wholesome if made in the right spirit; but let us take as well as give occasionally, and try to see things from the other man's point of view. His further evolution must begin and go on from the point where he is now; not from the point where Christian propagandists are (or perhaps think they are) now.

Yours respectfully,

AN EX-PRESBYTERIAN.

EMPLOYERS AND SERVANTS.

(TO THE EDITOR OF THE "JAPAN MAIL.")

SIR,—As the question of obtaining and retaining good and useful servants is one which concerns every householder, please permit me to give a little of my experience on this matter.

During a period of 18 months, I have employed and dismissed 11 or 12 servants, some on account of their being too lazy; others because they at first pretended to be capable, but afterwards proved useless; others left because they could not steal as much eatables as they liked; others who came perfectly green, were trained for a couple of months, and as soon as they could do something, left without giving notice, for a softer job I suppose or to obtain a yen or two more wages.

Our first cook, we tolerated for a long time. We gave to herself, her mother and two children accommodation on the premises, and practically gave her control of the stores. The result was that the whole family lived entirely at our expense, and our household expenses were at least 25 per cent. more than they should have been. We gradually removed one article after another from her care, placing them under lock and key, and when the opportunity for stealing was reduced to a minimum, and it was not worth her while to stay, she became so rude and careless that we were compelled to dismiss her. On comparing my experience with that of several friends recently, I found theirs to be similar to mine.

In some houses, a good deal of laxity is permitted by the mistresses; for instance, the kitchen is seldom visited to see that everything is kept clean and in order, accounts are not regularly checked to see that there is no squeezing; weights and prices of goods purchased are not checked or inquired into closely; servants' friends are permitted to enter the kitchen when the servants are actually at work and cause them to neglect their work,—and many other irregularities. When ser-wants accustomed to such laxity enter into service in houses where a strict and proper watch is kept over domestics to see that everything goes straight, they consider themselves badly treated when remonstrances are offered and avail themselves of an early opportunity to leave without giving notice.

The method of leaving without a word of warning after receipt of wages seems to be becoming general, and I would suggest that in order to check this a portion of each month's wages be deducted and deferred, to be paid over at certain periods, always leaving, however, a balance due until the termination of service in a proper manner, otherwise forfeiture of the money. The Japanese have a very excellent system of getting the best service out of their employees, by paying them a bonus at the end of each year, which is practically a portion of the wages deferred. An employee who leaves before the end of the year or misbehaves himself loses the right to his bonus, and the fear of losing the bonus acts as a safeguard against leaving without previous notice and to some extent against misconduct.

Servants applying to foreign householders for work and not producing testimonials have always a multitude of excuses to offer for the absence of these papers, and I think there should at least be an understanding amongst all foreign employers not to employ such persons without first making enquiries of their former employers.

I am informed that both in Yokohama and Tokyo, servants have guilds by which information regarding the conditions existing in foreign houses is passed round from one to another of the servants, which enables them to work against employers and carry out a kind of boycott occasionally. Since servants have guilds, why cannot employers have some organization by which some control may be exercised over the servants with a view to the improvement of their character and behaviour?

I have sketched out the lines on which I think a householders' union may be worked, and will give details later on, but in the meantime, I am anxious to see this matter ventilated in the public press, and finally to see some organization established providing the necessary remedy for the evils complained of. I have no doubt that if servants knew that there was some combination amongst employers exercising a watch over their behaviour, there would be a considerable improvement.

The possession of bad or incapable servants leads to a good deal of friction and annoyance in a house, and I therefore trust that this letter may call forth many suggestions. Employers who have now good servants do not know how soon they may have to find substitutes and fail to get good ones.

I invite others to communicate with me c/o of the Japan Mail office in the first instance, with a view to forming a union of householders, and will be very pleased to undertake a full share of the labour the formation and working of it may entail.

I am, Sir, etc., HOUSEHOLDER.

Tokyo, 6th June, 1906.

P. S.—Perhaps the ladies of the King's Daughters Circle might see their way to take this matter in hand in Yokohama, but perhaps Tokyo householders ought to make an independent move. We need a householders' union as much as we need a society for the protection of animals.

THE HOUSE TAX QUESTION.

(TO THE EDITOR OF THE "JAPAN MAIL.")

SIR,—Your remarks re the above question and also your translation from the Asahi are of interest; but what concerns Yokohama residents is: when are we to have the House Tax money returned to us which was distrained for on May 19th, 1902, and which the Hague Court decided was illegal more than a year ago?

Kobe residents had their money, which had been distrained for House Tax, returned to them on December 28th, 1905, and yet nothing has been done here? Why is Yokohama left out in the cold?

SALVATION ARMY OFFICERS' TRAINING SCHOOL.

On Saturday afternoon a service was conducted for the purpose of dedicating and opening a newly erected building to be used as an Officers' Training School. The building is situated in Ushigome, Tokyo, on the line of the electric tram and in front of the Imperial Military Academy. The site is well known on account of a very large old pine which is upon it and which is known as the Koaki mansta, through its connection with a celebrated Tokugawa general of that name. It is a large semi-foreign building, three stories, and covering 150 tsubo, and contains accommodation for 60 students in addition to lecture room and all the other necessary adjuncts of such an institution.

The commanding officer in Japan, Colonel Bullard, was in charge of the proceedings, assisted by Brigadier Duce, Major Yamamuro, Major Erickson and Staff Captain and Mrs. Orr, who have been appointed to take charge of the School and 80 other officers. Several prominent gentlemen gave addresses including, Mr. Shimada Saburo, M. P., Rev. Koyaki and Mr. Kosuke Tomeoka. Among those present were Judge Watanabi, Mr. Toyono, Governor of Ichigaya Prison, Mr. Hara, Professor Clement.

The service opened with music by a Brass Band and the usual preliminary exercises, after which Colonel Bullard gave an account of the purposes of the institution and some interesting particulars relating to the Salvation Army system of training.

Mr. Tomeoka then gave an address and paid a warm tribute to the work of the Army. He had recently returned from a visit to the U. S. A. and England and had visited a large number of Army institutions in those countries. He had met General Booth and had therefore been afforded an opportunity of seeing much of the excellent work being performed by the Army in other countries. He was also much in sympathy with the practical work being done by the Army in Japan.

Rev. Koyaki gave an eloquent address, basing his remarks on the passage of St. Paul in Timothy "Endure hardness as a good soldier." He gave some practical advice to the students and expressed his sympathy with the work of the Army. There was the danger, he said, of "building churches and saying come, but it was necessary to compel them to come in, and this the Army was doing."

Mr. Shimada gave a very stirring address which provoked great enthusiasm. He considered the progress of the work of the Army in Japan during the past eleven years as remarkable and evidencing not human but divine power. He had the greatest admiration for General Booth, whom he considered to be the greatest man of the past or present century. He had utilized all the forces favourable to the spread of religion and the Army had in consequence extended with a rapidity that was without precedent in the history of the world. He referred to the British Government having taken up the Army's Colonization Scheme and also the City of London having presented the Freedom of the City to the General.

After the benediction had been pronounced the visitors inspected the building and the usual refreshments were provided.

The building itself certainly does credit to the builder, Mr. Shimidzu, of Kyobashi, Tokyo. Ten total cost was yen 12,000. The land has been secured on a superficies.

SPANISH ROYAL MARRIAGE.

Bomb Thrown at Their Majesties.

Narrow Escape of the Royal Couple.

MANY KILLED AND INJURED.

London, June 1.

King Alfonso and Princess Ena of Battenberg were married at the Church of San Gerinomo on May 31st. The assemblage was of the most brilliant character.

A bomb was thrown close to the Royal carriage as their Majesties returned to the Palace from the Church. Both were unhurt.

Later.

The bomb was enclosed in a bouquet and thrown from an upper window of a house a quarter of a mile from the palace. It fell behind the hindmost horses and the wheels of the Royal carriage, which was severely damaged. The horses were killed.

An equerry 'dragged their Majesties out of the wreck.

Nine persons were killed, including a lieutenant, four soldiers and two women.

Marquis Sotomayor was wounded. Their Majesties reached the palace and ascended the famous white marble staircase weeping. They were surrounded by all the Royalties who had attended the wedding. Numerous arrests were made.

The official programme for the wedding of King Alfonso and Princess Ena of Battenberg is as follows:—May 29th—Introduction of the foreign princes to the princess at the Prado Palace. In the evening, theatricals. May 30th—In the afternoon, signing of the marriage contract at the Prado Palace in the presence of the grandees of Spain, and the foreign princes. May 31st—At 11 a.m., the wedding in the Church of St. Gerinomo, by the Archbishop of Toledo. June 1st—At 8.35 p.m., banquet, attended only by the members of the Spanish royal family and the foreign princes. June 2nd—In the afternoon, battle of flowers. In the evening, performance at the Teatro Reale. June 3rd—Service in the morning in the palace chapel. In the evening, state ball. June 4th—Bull fight. June 5th—Excursion to Aranjuez. In the evening, torchlight procession. June 6th—Banquet to Spanish officials. June 7th—Banquet to the diplomatic corps. June 8th—Official reception and, in the evening, ball of the municipality.

Later.

After the explosion of the bomb, King Alfonso stood up as if to protect Queen Ena and smilingly saluted the alarmed public. His Majesty assisted the Queen to alight.

The bomb was of polished steel and burst in the air killing two aristocratic occupants on the balcony. The people are infuriated and threatening to lynch foreigners.

London, June 2.

According to the latest report, three officers, seven soldiers and ten spectators were killed and one hundred injured, including General Weyler, who is seriously wounded.

Later.

Their Majesties King Alfonso and Queen Ena motored unescorted through Madrid in the forenoon. The people gave them a tremendous ovation, crowds running in streams on either side. They showed a delirious enthusiasm, indicating that the outrage in Madrid was hatched by anarchists in London.

Queen Ena is indisposed.

The wedding festivities continue in Madrid.

A tourist named Hamilton has been arrested in Madrid on suspicion of being an Anarchist. The mob nearly lynched him. The British Embassy demanded his release which the authorities refused before he had exculpated himself.

King Alfonso visited the wounded at the hospitals and was reluctantly dissuaded from attending the funerals of the eight victims. At the funeral the King of Spain, the Prince of Wales and the foreign princes were all represented.

The Queen's wedding dress was splashed with the blood of the victims of the explosion.

Later.

During the course of yesterday their Majesties, the King and Queen of Spain, frequently appeared on the balcony of the palace and were ovated.

The city of Madrid was magnificently illuminated last night.

Their Majesties have been overwhelmed with telegraphic congratulations from everywhere in the world.

June 3rd.

Their Majesties King Alfonso and Queen Ena attended a thanksgiving service in Madrid and afterwards proceeded to view a bull-fight. The Queen wore a white mantilla.

Mr. Hamilton has been released as an inoffensive tourist.

London, June 4.

An Anarchist named Matteo Moreno was arrested at a village near Madrid. He shot a police constable with a revolver and then committed suicide. He has been identified as the man who threw the bomb at the royal carriage.

Their Majesties the King and Queen, after several bulls had been despatched, left the scene. All the royal personages, including Princess Henry of Battenberg, attended the affair, but the Prince and Princess of Wales and the members of the British diplomatic corps were absent.

Mateo Marel, aged twenty-eight, the son of a wealthy merchant at Sabadell (10 miles north of Barcelona), educated in Germany, and an avowed anarchist, was arrested at Torrijos, fifteen miles from Madrid. The state of his boots and clothes indicated that he had been tramping day and night, hiding like a hunted animal till he thought it safe to take the train. Enquiries made at a wayside inn with reference to trains to Barcelona, coupled with his appearance, aroused suspicions and a policeman was fetched, whereupon Marel started villagewards. A mile and a half distant, when called upon to surrender, he shot the policeman dead by the roadside. He then started across country but the report of his pistol brought out a party of villagers in pursuit and he then shot himself in the heart.

The occupants of the house in Madrid whence the bomb was thrown have since identified his body.

THE OPIUM QUESTION.

London, June 1.

The British House of Commons has adopted the motion of Mr. Theodore Taylor, condemning the opium traffic. In connection therewith Mr. John Morley, Secretary for India, said that if China seriously desired to restrict the consumption of Indian opium, His Majesty's Government would agree to any plan, even though it may involve sacrifice.

BRITISH ROYALTY AND BULL FIGHTING.

The Prince of Wales and his suite and the British Ambassador and his staff will not attend the royal bull-fight in Madrid on Saturday.

DEATH OF MR. MICHAEL DAVITT.

The death is announced of Mr. Michael Davitt, the well-known Irish politician, aged 60.

THE AMERICAN MEAT PACKING SCANDAL.

London, June 1.

The agitation in America on account of the meat-packing scandal is increasing. Telegrams and letters are pouring in on President Roosevelt demanding publication of confidential reports. Already there is a marked falling off in the domestic and foreign tinned meat trade.

FRENCH DEFICIT.

London, June 2.

It is announced that France spent eight millions sterling for military preparations in the Morocco crisis and hence the heavy deficit.

THE "MONTAGU" DISASTER.

London, June 2.

A gale, raising a heavy sea in the Bristol Channel, is imperilling H.M.S. Montagu, ashore on Lundy Island. Salvage operations have been suspended.

M. BRISSON ELECTED.

The French Chamber, when it reassembled, elected M. Brisson President of the Assembly.

BRITISH NAVY.

Rear-Admiral Egerton has been appointed second in command of the British Atlantic fleet.

AUSTRIAN POLITICS.

Baron Beck has formed a new Austrian Ministry.

THE CHINESE CUSTOMS.

London, June 4.

The officers and crews of the battleships Kashima and Katori have been banqueted by the naval officers at Portsmouth.

THE CRETAN QUESTION.

The Observer says that the result of King Edward's visit to Greece is that the Cretan question will probably be settled, Greeks replacing the international guards and Suda Bay lapsing to Great Britain.

AN ITALIAN SENSATION.

Great excitement has been caused in Italy by the discovery of bombs at Ancona, which King Victor Emanuel was to visit on the 24th of June.

NATAL'S TROUBLES.

Information received by the Natal Intelligence Bureau tends to show that Dinizulu is the cause of the whole native trouble.

THE FRENCH BUDGET.

London, June 5.

The French Minister of Finance has succeeded in securing from his colleagues a reduction of the deficit on the budget to seven millions sterling.

MEAT PACKING.

President Roosevelt has sent a confidential report to Congress with reference to the question of meat packing. He declares that the condition of Chicago packing houses is revolting and that legislation must be radically changed in the interests of health and decency. The present law prohibits the shipment of uninspected meat abroad but leaves an avenue for interstate traffic in diseased products.

The report emphasises the necessity of ventilation and sanitation and condemns the rotting wooden floors, steeped in diseased germs of man and animals. It points out that the Government expects only live animals to be treated, not dead meat.

FIGHTING IN ZULULAND.

London, June 5.

Colonel Mackenzie reports that the Zulus thrice charged Royston's Horse through the thick bush. There was almost hand to hand fighting and had not Royston's Horse been promptly supported the result might have been disastrous.

KING AND QUEEN OF SPAIN.

King Alfonso and Queen Ena attended a review of 20,000 troops at Carabanchel, near Madrid. They received a great ovation. The scenes all along the route rivalled the road to Epsom on Derby day.

JAPANESE SAILORS IN ENGLAND.

Portsmouth is entertaining the Japanese crews of the battleships Katori and Kashima with daily festivities.

THE MADRID OUTRAGE.

The officials are reticent but it is stated that hitherto 24 have died in Madrid as a result of the bomb explosion and others are dying.

AMERICAN COURTS IN CHINA.

London, June 6.

It is reported from Washington that the House of Representatives has passed the bill establishing district judgeships in China, courts to be held annually at Shanghai, Hankow, Tientsin, and Canton.

SAN FRANCISCO AGAIN VISITED.

There was another earthquake at San Francisco on Monday night but no damage was done.

THE SPANISH BOMB OUTRAGE.

The director of the modern school at Barcelona where Moral lodged, and several professing anarchists, have been arrested. The Barcelona police declare that it has been established that Moral was the author of the bomb outrage in Paris.

MR. CHAMBERLAIN AND THE EDUCATION BILL.

London, June 6.

Mr. Chamberlain, speaking at Highbury, said the Education Bill would never pass. He would not be surprised if a general election took place next spring.

TINNED MEATS.

It is anticipated that the Chicago disclosures will cause a boom in Australian and New Zealand tinned goods.

It is stated that the War Office and Admiralty have stipulated for colonial tinned meat in recent contracts.

THE MADRID OUTRAGE.

Later.

Two more soldiers have died in Madrid. Owing to the number of injured suffering from blood poisoning, it is believed that the bomb was poisoned.

A torchlight procession ended the festivities last night.

The Prince and Princess of Wales and other foreign guests leave Spain to-day.

THE ZULU TROUBLE.

There are growing apprehensions in Natal at the disaffection of Dinizulu.

THE BRITISH NAVAL MANOEUVRES.

Later.

The programme of the naval manoeuvres has been issued. They extend from Great Britain to Gibraltar and the South Atlantic and they will last from June 23rd to July 2nd. Vice-Admiral Sir W. H. May will command the enemy, and Admiral Sir Arthur K. Wilson will command the defenders. Merchant steamers, cooperating will call at Falmouth, Milford Haven, and Gibraltar. They will leave in batches and will try to escape the enemy. They will supply information to the squadron under Admiral Wilson. Those that are captured will proceed on their voyage and cease to supply information. Mail steamers will be exempt from stoppage.

FRANCE AND MOROCCO.

France is sending two cruisers to Tangier to support her demands for reparation in connection with the murder of Charbonnier outside Tangier, including the execution of the murderer and the payment of an indemnity.

(BY SPECIAL ARRANGEMENT WITH THE "TOKYO ASAHI SHIMBUN.")

INDIA AND TIBET.

London, June 1.

Simla telegraphs that Tibet has paid the first instalment of the indemnity. The Government of India is developing trade facilities in Tibet.

THE "MONTAGU."

London, June 5.

The operations of salving the battleship Montagu are considered to demonstrate the unwisdom of present naval methods, because they show that such a casualty calls for special treatment and appliances.

London, June 6.

A telegram from St. Petersburg says that the attitude of the peasantry towards the Duma indicates that they have left the Constitutionalists and joined the Socialists. Their action threatens to seriously compromise the Duma. Telegrams announce that the villagers are prepared to resort to violence.

London, June 7.

A telegram from St. Petersburg says that the peasants and the Duma have realised the Socialist intrigues and have abandoned them. They have returned to the Constitutional movement, and the provocations of the Socialists have failed.

EXPORTS.

RAW SILK.

The stock being now reduced to under 1,000 bales almost the only business doing is for home demand, which is brisk for the habutae silk goods trade.

Advices from Gumma Prefecture report damage by frost to the new crop but the area affected is small. Some of the cocoon markets in the interior have opened. Prices paid bring the cost of new filature silk up to yen 1,000 for No. 1. The quality is reported to be good and the supply is expected to exceed that of the past season.

SUMMARY OF NEWS.

A CASE of plague was reported in Osaka on June 7th.

FROM all parts of Japan come complaints of shortness of water.

ON June 10th, a mine was washed ashore at Iwasaki, West Tsugaru, near Aomori.

A DEAD rat infected with plague has been found in West Yaitai-machi, Fukagawa, Tokyo.

M. MACHIMOFF, Russian Consul at Kobe, arrived at his post from Vladivostok on June 8th.

SOME capitalists of Nagoya intend to establish a gas-works there with a capital of two million yen.

A CASE of plague was reported on June 8th in Osaka and another the following day at Shimono-seki.

THE delivery of the southern section of the East China Railway having been completed by the Russians, Major-General Nakamura and other commissioners arrived at Port Arthur on June 5th on their way home.

ON June 9th, snow fell in Fuji-gori, Shizuoka prefecture. The thermometer read 56 degrees Fahr.

THE Empress will visit the Tokyo Charity Hospital on June 15th leaving the Palace at 2 p.m.

A SLIGHT of shock earthquake was felt in Yokohama, at 4.07 a.m. on Monday, the duration being 2m. 38 sec.

NEW cocoons were put on the Tochigi market on June 7th. The price was yen 4.50 per kwanme or about 3.75 kilos.

THE annual dinner of the local branch of the Japan Society was held in Tokyo on Tuesday, the British Ambassador presiding.

ACCORDING to the Osaka Mainichi, the Russian steamer Europe, which was sunk at Port Arthur during the war, has been floated.

MAJOR-GENERAL Fukushima, Vice-Chief of the Staff Office, left Shimbashi on June 10th by the 8 a.m. train on his way to Manchuria.

Two submarines, Nos. 6 and 7, which were constructed at the Kawasaki Shipbuilding Yard, Kobe, were transferred on June 9th to Kure.

THE training ship Presidente Sarmiento, of the Argentine Republic, with cadets has arrived at Dairen. She will shortly leave for Japan.

THE death is announced, from heart disease, of the Rt. Hon. Richard Seddon, who played such a prominent part in New Zealand during recent years.

THE Nagasaki correspondent of the Hochi contradicts the report that the work of laying a cable between Japan and Manila has been completed.

ONE of the crew of the German steamer Roon has been arrested at Nagasaki on a charge of having taken photographs within the area of the Nagasaki defences.

GLANDERS seem to be still prevalent in Yokohama. On June 9th, two China ponies were found suffering from the disease. They were removed to Negishi for isolation.

EARLY on the morning of June 9th, a passenger train collided with a freight train at Saga station, (Kyushu). The former's locomotive was derailed. No person was injured.

TWO cases of small-pox were reported on June 11th in Wakamatsu, Fukushima prefecture. A new case of plague appeared the same day in the village of Otake near Hiroshima.

ACCORDING to a telegram received by the Volia at Nagasaki, the trouble caused by the strikers in Odessa continues. The crews of some Volunteer ships have joined the rioters.

THE steamer Edo Maru, which went ashore on June 6th in the neighbourhood of Mutsure island, was floated the same evening without damage. The following morning she left for Osaka.

THE wedding of Mr. R. Nagashima, a secretary of the Department of Finance, and Miss Kiyo Katsura (19) third daughter of Count Katsura, took place on June 11th at the Hoshiga-Oka-ya.

THE interim dividend of the Tokyo-Yokohama Electric Company is expected to be at the rate of 13 per cent. per annum. The company will shortly hold a general meeting. The net income of the Tokyo Electric Light Company for the first half year was yen 314,589, the dividend being 12 per cent per annum, or yen 3 per old share and yen 1.20 per new share.

TOKYO papers print a rumour that the Government intends to issue bonds amounting to twenty-five million sterling in order to redeem 5 per cent. bonds of twenty million sterling and for other purposes.

THE net income of the Tokyo Street Railway Co., for the first half year—from Dec. 1st, 1905, to May 31st, 1906—was yen 467,277.90. A dividend was paid of yen 2 per old share and yen 1 per new share.

A LONDON telegram has been received in Osaka to the effect that the price of copper has advanced to £85.26. The message adds that the rise is attributed to the recent strike in the copper mine district in Mexico.

THE Tokyo police authorities have prohibited the sale of a French toilet powder bearing the name of "Henri," and are seizing it when found in the drapers' shops. It is said that the material is mixed with mercury.

ON June 7th, a farmer of Kanaka named S. Fukushima (34) murdered his wife and four children, using a hatchet. Subsequently he committed suicide by hanging himself. Poverty is reported to be the cause.

OWING to the scarcity of water, the Tokyo Water Works Office has stopped the fountains and water-falls in the various parks, etc. It is said that the River Tama, which is the source of the supply, is gradually drying up.

THE Russian Home Department has issued a notification, according to the Novoe Vremya prohibiting newspapers from the publication of any report with regard to the movements and organization of the armies still in Manchuria.

It is said by the Nichi Nichi that during the war, war-notes issued amounted to a hundred and forty million yen. Of this sum ninety million were circulated in Manchuria. The notes now in circulation are estimated at twenty million yen.

THE total sum of yen 1,055,858.249 was received by the Home Department from the public for the relief of the Tohoku famine distress. Of this the following distributions were made: to Miyagi prefecture, yen 503,723.82; to Fukushima prefecture, yen 318,380.702; and to Iwate prefecture, yen 205,637.107. The balance is still in the hands of the authorities.

ONE of the leading restaurants in St. Petersburg is shortly going to have only Chinese waiters. The Russian waiter is impossible, the Pole is bad, and the Tartars who have been so far employed in the leading hotels and restaurants, are forming unions and becoming unreasonable in their demands, hence a shrewd restaurant keeper who has had a little experience of Chinese "boys" has rightly come to the conclusion that they are the best waiters in the world.

ALL the plasterers of Yokohama have struck, asking for an increase in wages to yen 1.10 per day. On June 7th, the headmen of their guild met and investigated the request of the strikers, after which the former decided not to give consent. The strikers are making preparations to retire from the Yokohama union and to remove to Tokyo or Yokosuka. Further, the workmen are inducing their fellow-workmen in the employ of the headmen to join them.

MANCHURIAN RAILWAY COMPANY.

We mentioned in a recent issue that the Government had decided to organize a company for working the East Chinese Railway and the Fushun coal mines. The intention has now been carried out. Imperial Ordinance No. 142, declares the formation of the Minami Manshu Tetsudo Kabushiki Kaisha (South Manchurian Railway Joint Stock Company). The shareholders are limited to the Governments of Japan and China and to Chinese and Japanese subjects. No provision is yet made as to the amount of capital, but it may be raised in several installments provided that none shall be smaller than one-fifth of the total, and that the sum called up on the shares shall not be less than one-tenth of the latter amount. The main office is to be in Tokyo with a branch at Tairen. The establishment of officers is fixed, the President and Vice-President being appointed by the Japanese Government for a period of 5 years. There is to be a committee of organization and after it has completed its investigations and presented its report, the capital will be fixed and the first portion issued. These are the principal points. Rumour says that the capital will be 170 million yen. The Japanese Government will not, of course, be required to put up any money: its contribution will be the railway and the mines. With regard to making the company solely a Japanese and Chinese affair, we have to recall the facts that by the agreement concluded at Portsmouth Japan is pledged to work the railway handed over by Russia on its old lines so far as China is concerned, and that by the second article of the new China-Japan Treaty, Japan engaged that "in the matter of railway construction and exploitation she would, as far as circumstances permit, conform to the original agreements concluded between China and Russia." These agreements confine the shareholders to Russian and Chinese subjects, and further entitle China to repurchase the railway all the end of 36 years, failing which purchase it will revert to her gratis at the end of 80 years. It is said that the new company will construct the Changchun-Kirin line also. In the Fiji Shimpō we find a rumour that the capital will be equally divided between the Japanese Government and the other shareholders. There is talk of introducing foreign capital in connexion with this enterprise.

It is conjectured that the capital of the newly established South Manchurian Railway Company will be 150 million yen, one half of which will be put up by the Japanese Government in the form of the railway and the Fushun mines, while the other half will be subscribed by the Chinese Government and by Japanese and Chinese subjects. Tokyo newspapers allege that the 4 ft. 8 gage will be adopted so as to bring the railway into accord with the Chinese and Korean systems. It will differ from the Russian system, but that, though unfortunate, is the least evil. The idea is that the Anpo road (Antung and Mukden), the Changchun-Kirin road and the Hsinmintun-Mukden road will all be constructed and worked by this company, but if so its capital will have to be increased. We gather that the Japanese Government desired to throw open the ownership of shares to all nationalities, but the Chinese Government's present mood did not permit that course. China of course had to be brought into line with any proposal, for what Japan has obtained from Russia is not, and could not be, more than what Russia had obtained from China. The holders of shares were restricted to Russian and Chinese subjects under the original agreement between the Russo-Chinese Bank and the Chinese Government. Probably that restriction owed its origin to Russia's wishes, her project being to exclude all foreign interference in a region which she had earmarked for ultimate inclusion in her own domains. But it is regrettable that Japan, who professes and intends to pursue the policy of the open door, should be obliged to follow such a precedent in this case. Leading journals like the Fiji Shimpō and the Shogyō Shimpō strongly urge that a policy free from all discrimination should be adopted.

The railway recently taken over from the Russians to the north of Changtu is open for construction trains through a distance of 22 miles. It will not be possible, however, for locomotives to run to Shwangmiaotsz before August or to Supingchich before October. There is difficulty in obtaining and transporting the necessary materials, and although construction trains may run by the time here indicated, it is unlikely that the line will be open for general traffic during the course of the current year.

It does not yet seem to be clearly understood by the public that the question of the nationality of shareholders in the recently organized South Manchuria Railway Company did not present itself to the Japanese Government in an unrestricted light. Japan has no fee simple of the railway from Port Arthur and Talien to Changchung. Whatever right of property she holds in the line or in the mines along its course was acquired by her from Russia, who, in turn, having acquired it from China, was obviously incompetent to convey to a third party anything more than she herself possessed as China's leasee. Now the original concession to the Russo-Chinese Bank explicitly provided that the shareholders should be limited to Russian and Chinese subjects, and the Japanese Government, in their treaty of last December with China, "engaged that in regard to * * * railway construction and exploitation, they would, so far as circumstances permit, conform to the original agreements concluded between China and Russia." China was therefore competent to require that since these latter agreements limited the shareholders to Russians and Chinese, the shareholders in the new Japanese Company, which practically takes the place of the Russo-Chinese Bank, must be correspondingly limited to Japanese and Chinese. Very likely the restriction was laid down in the first place at Russia's dictation. We may fairly assume that she did not desire to have other Occidentals associated with herself in the exploitation of Manchuria, and that she intended the Chinese shareholders to be mere figure-heads, if, indeed, they materialized at all, which they do not appear to have ever done. That would have been natural enough on Russia's part and quite impeccable. As between China and Japan, however, it is understood that the latter, not following Russia's example, would have been glad to throw open the shareholders' list to all nationalities, whereas China, on her side, though probably a passive party to the restriction originally imposed by Russia, now obeyed her new mood of "China for the Chinese," and insisted that the restriction must be continued, mutatis mutandis. She was within her rights. Possibly in the saving clause, "so far as circumstances permit" the Japanese negotiators might have found room for insisting on more liberal arrangements, but it is difficult to conceive what train of "circumstances" could have been conjured up to warrant such a departure.

The amount of the new Company's capital remains undecided so far as is publicly known; but 150 million yen is now spoken of confidently. Concerning the works demanding outlays mention is made, in the first place, of a railway wharf and warehouses at Tairen, but of course that would not involve any very considerable expenditure. Then there are the widening of the gage throughout a great part of the distance between Port Arthur and Changchung and the provision of new rolling stock, as well as the repairs of the road beyond Changtu. We have no estimate of the amount needed for these purposes but thirty millions ought to cover it, according to some authorities. It is currently believed that the Antung-Mukden line also will be handed over to this Company, and 20 million yen is spoken of as the probable cost of converting the present temporary line into a permanent one. Finally, the Fushun mines will require some outlay. They are said to have produced 800 tons daily in Russian hands, but their present output is only from 300 to 400 tons, and the appliances will have to be much enlarged. All these expenditures are estimated to aggregate about 60 millions and it is expected that recourse will be had to foreign capital. Tokyo journals speak of Mr. Harriman or Mr. Schiff as having the first claim to be consulted as to the raising of money abroad, but we do not find any tangible reasons assigned for this differentiation.

As the public knows, the last section of the East Chinese Railway will be handed over to Japanese on the 1st of August. But when Generals Fukushima and Ovanofsky were drafting the convention which fixed the times and the procedure for handing over the various parts of the line, they found themselves unable to determine the question of the ownership of the Changchung station: should it be in Russian hands; should it be in Japanese hands, or should it be in joint possession? One fact makes very strongly for the station being Japanese; namely, that it lies 30 cho (about 2 miles) south of Changchung and is thus situated in a region indisputably belonging to Japan. The Russians claim, however, that as the starting point of the line to Europe from Manchuria, which line belongs to them, the station should be theirs—a not very conclusive argument, inasmuch as it would have equal efficacy if applied to the Liaotung line. However, Generals Fukushima and Ovanofsky, finding it impossible to arrive at a settlement, decided that the point should be left for diplomatic discussion. It will probably prove a hard nut to crack. The present position of the station clearly makes for Japanese ownership since the duty of protecting it must of necessity devolve on the Japanese railway guards. But Russia will doubtless struggle hard against such an arrangement and will probably suggest her readiness to change the site of the station rather than to see it transferred to Japanese hands. In point of fact the matter has very little practical importance. Changchung is only a nominal terminus of the Trans-Asian line. The trains carrying passengers and freight to and from Europe will pass through the place with the least possible delay. There will be some delay on account of the break of gage but there will be no purchasing of tickets or re-booking of goods.

CHINA.

Sunday, June 10.

In reporting the fact that the Chinese Government had addressed to the British Legation a despatch containing all the necessary assurances with regard to the Customs question, the telegrams alleged that, though generally satisfactory, the document contained one or two objectionable ideographs. The latest news says that at the instance of Mr. Carnegie these have been altered by the Waiwupu and thus no ground of complaint remains. The despatch has been sent to the other Legations also, and is regarded as an assurance that there shall be no change in the administration of the Customs so long as the indemnity is not fully paid. It appears to us that China deserves a great deal of credit in this matter, at all events so far as its closing episodes are concerned. What her motive may have been originally in issuing the objectionable edict it is not possible to say with any assurance, but that it was not a sinister motive, as many allege, may reasonably be inferred from the readiness shown by her to listen to and recognise remonstrances subsequently formulated by the British Legation and the advice tendered by Japan. We have to observe that she was called on to choose between occupying a somewhat humiliating position and insisting on her own administrative autonomy within her dominions. For it is distinctly humiliating to admit constructively, as she has now done, that her own subjects are not sufficiently worthy of confidence to be trusted with the control of her customs. She has made the admission rather than provoke international complications, though she must be very well aware that such a question could never have assumed really grave proportions. But can it be safely asserted that no unpleasant memory will survive, or that another impetus has not been given to the China-for-the-Chinese propaganda? Dr. Morrison thinks the settlement unsatisfactory because it inferentially asserts the irrevocability of Imperial Decrees. That seems to illustrate the creed inspiring Western dealings with China. Would it be suggested for a moment that any decree issued by a European potentate should be revocable at foreign dictation? We do not think so, and although to look at these incidents by the light of strict justice is not always a pleasant prospect or likely to be popular with a majority of our countrymen in the Far East, facts which go to the making of future history are not to be ignored.

A telegram to the Hochi Shimbun from Peking says that it has been decided not to renew the agreements of the German and Austrian military instructors now serving in Shangtung, and that their posts will be filled by Japanese officers. That will cause some jealousy, but after all it is very natural. The Japanese are much closer to the Chinese in an ethical sense than any European nationals can be. They have also the immense advantage of reading Chinese ideographs so that communication between highly educated Japanese and Chinese is not difficult. But apart from these considerations the trend of the times is evidently in favour of the growth of Japanese influence in China. Looking back 35 years one can recall how the events of 1871 induced the Japanese to transfer their student-ship of military science from France to Germany, and now that the Japanese star is brightest on the military firmament, corresponding changes may be looked for in China. If the conduct of Chinese students in Tokyo can be regulated so as to obviate the necessity of irksome control, we may see fifty thousand of them thronging the portals of science in the Japanese capital before many years have passed. Mr. Uchida is reported to have said that Viceroy Yuan would like to see a hundred thousand of his country's youths thus occupied, and Mr. Uchida added that he considered the abolition of the system of civil-service examinations in China a reform as great and wide-reaching as the abolition of feudalism in Japan. At any rate, that event in China has imparted a wholly new value to the acquisition of foreign sciences, and in all probability Japan will for many years serve as a college to her neighbour.

The new Chinese Code of Civil Procedure having been submitted for examination by the various local authorities, elicited the approval of all except Viceroy Chang, who found that some of its provisions did not take due account of established customs and usages. He memorialized the Government in that sense, and orders have accordingly been issued that a personal conference shall take place between the Viceroy and the drafters of the code with a view to effecting the necessary corrections.

Monday, June 12.

Tokyo journals state that the Chinese Representatives in Great Britain, Germany and Austria have addressed a joint note to the Peking Government contending that China is threatened with danger on all sides. Japan, in a few years, will have recuperated her losses in the recent war and will be ready for fresh enterprises. Russia, so soon as she has settled her internal affairs, will once again stretch out her hands towards Far-Eastern Asia; France will push forward her railways over the southern border, and British activity in Tibet is only just beginning. China is thus under an imperative necessity to prepare for obviously pending contingencies. The three ministers recommend three things, first, that a constitutional government be organized; secondly that local administrative autonomy be granted; and thirdly that laws be enacted for the better control of freedom of speech and public meeting.

Thursday, June 14.

There are conflicting accounts of the negotiations relating to the Nanshan affair. The Fiji Shimpō's news is that the discussion of the question has been renewed, but the Asahi's correspondent says that France will yield nothing and that things are at a deadlock.

An Imperial Edict very pessimistic in tone has been published in Peking. It speaks of the suffering of the people, of the natural calamities from which they suffer, and of the burdens that have to be made on them for the payment of the indemnity. Under these circumstances the greatest circumspection is enjoined upon officials to exercise all possible economy, and they are at the same time urged to take every feasible step with the object of maintaining peace and good order and checking the insurrections which have of late caused so much trouble in the Yangtze Valley. The Decree, while fully recognising this unhappy state of affairs, nevertheless informs the people that taxes have to be imposed for essential public works and for the purposes of the Army, and exhorts them to bear these imposts patiently. One would suppose from reading the document that the Chinese nation was greatly over-burdened with taxes, yet in point of fact it is one of the most fortunate nations of the world in this respect, and were a constitutional government established so that the taxes might have the sanction of the people themselves, the State's income might be greatly increased without any sensible addition to the general burdens.

The Canton-Hankow railway question, which has been agitating the people of Canton for some time, is reported to have been amicably settled through the intervention of a committee appointed by Mr. Chou, Viceroy of the Liangkwan. The four leading citizens who were arrested for fomenting opposition to the Viceroy have been released and acquitted. The Viceroy, in a proclamation announcing this pacific result, speaks of railways as essential necessities of the State.

The second of the six Chinese gun-boats now under construction at the Kawasaki dock-yard in Kobe was launched on the 12th instant. She is named the Chu-ting. Her predecessor, the Chu-tai, was launched on the 28th of May. These gun-boats are of 740 tons displacement and 13 knots speed. They carry an armament of two 12-cent. quick-firers, two 12-pr. quick-firers and four maxims.

Viceroy Yuan Shih-k'ai has informed the Government that the balance of the German garrisons at Yangchun, Langfong, Lutai, and Peitang have all left for Europe and their barracks have been presented to China. The German garrisons at Peitaiho and Shanhaikuan will leave about the end of this month.

It is reported that the Chinese Government is sending seventy students to the Naval College at Tokyo.

The Japanese Government has notified the Waiwupu that the Chinese officials appointed to Yingkow will be allowed to take up their posts provided they do not interfere with the military administration there.

According to the Nanfangpao the Minister-Resident at Kulun has memorialised the Throne asking that in making the present treaty with Russia, a limit be fixed to the number of Russian merchants and their commercial rights in Kulun, so as to prevent complications in future, the Russians being often disposed to interfere in the internal administration of Mongolia.

The brother of a young American named Morley, who left Peking this time last year in company with a Frenchman and has mysteriously disappeared, has discovered a Chinese boy who states that his brother was murdered by a foreigner.

The Canton correspondent of the China Mail says that considerable discussion has been occasioned by the capture of certain junks, owned by Chinese naturalised Portuguese subjects, which were carrying salt. The Portuguese Minister objected to the seizure of the salt which the Chinese authorities claimed was smuggled. It was contended that the salt had been purchased in Hongkong for transhipment to Macao and that though the junks had to pass through Chinese waters to reach Macao, they did not touch at Chinese ports. The Waiwupu has commenced negotiations with the Portuguese Minister and it is hoped to arrive at a thorough understanding.

Six months have now elapsed since the Cantonese so eagerly purchased shares in the Canton-Hankow Railway and as yet not a sod has been turned. The shareholders at Hongkong have refused to remit funds to Canton and have wired to fellow-shareholders elsewhere to act similarly until new directors and trustees take the place of those at present in office.

A Sendai telegram reports that on June 12th, an engine-boiler belonging to the Ishinomaki stone material factory exploded. The building was severely damaged, three persons were killed and five injured.

KOREA.

Saturday, June 9.

The insurgents in Thai-in, Chhollado province, are still raiding the district. There is no appearance of the Korean Authorities being able to quell them. From Kwangwondo also comes news that a party of insurgents attacked Chollwon on the 6th instant and injured some Japanese. A detachment of 6 Japanese soldiers was sent to the place and en route they encountered resistance, but with what result we do not learn. Further, at a point (Ulli) on the coast about 150 miles south of Gensan, Japanese fishermen have been attacked and while some of them were compelled to retire, about a hundred are taking measures for defence. On the whole the condition of Korea seems to be somewhat unsatisfactory. It will have been observed doubtless that when the Japanese have to deal with these emeutes, they send very small parties of police or soldiers against numerous bodies of insurgents. Two companies despatched against Honju represent the most formidable force hitherto despatched. The usual dimensions are half a dozen or even only three or four. In the columns of the Nippon this habit provokes remonstrance founded chiefly, we gather, on the case of Sergeant Hijikata. Our contemporary regards it as an action imperilling human life to employ such paltry detachments on service which may demand considerable force. But it does not appear that the Japanese policy has been attended with any failures. Sergeant Hijikata went on a reconnoitering expedition. He did not set out to fight and apparently he was taken unawares. Those who are on the spot and who have the best means of judging must be held most capable of deciding how to proceed. We may mention that Sergeant Hijikata has been raised to the posthumous rank of "inspector" and that a sum of 3,000 yen has been granted to his family. Constable Kushibashi perished at the same time, and a sum of 2,000 yen has been given to his family. These facts indicate that the Residency General intends to deal very liberally with those serving under its orders.

Sunday, June 10.

The troubles are now reported to be increasing in Chhollado. Kongju is threatened and the Japanese residing there are making preparations to leave at a moment's notice. A detachment of five policemen have set out from Chhongju to protect the menaced place but it is difficult to see what they can effect. From Mokpho also comes news that Chhongyang is a centre of disturbance and that the insurgents have spread thence to Tamyang and Changson. The destroyers Shinonome and Sazanami which are at Mokpho have been ordered to remain there pending contingencies. These Chhollado insurgents seem to contemplate an attack upon Nagu in the northern part of the province, and the Korean troops in Kangju show symptoms of disaffection which suggest that they are disposed to throw in their lot with the insurgents. Chhollado is the south-western province of Korea. In the north-eastern province of Kangwondo, too, the trouble continues. There the insurgents openly declare it to be their object to drive out the Japanese. Kangneung is their headquarters. Three Japanese who were residing there, attempted to escape to Fusan, but on the way they were attacked and one seems to have lost his life. Numbers of Japanese subjects are engaged in the fishing industry in this province and it is feared that unless means are quickly taken for their protection a catastrophe may occur, or, at any rate, they may be obliged to abandon their work and suffer heavy loss. Ninety of the Hongju prisoners are still held in custody and were to be sent under escort to Seoul on the 9th instant, the remainder (55) having been released. The Hochi Shimbun, apparently on the authority of correspondence from Korea, alleges that these disturbances have no profound political significance. The leaders of the insurgents are men of more or less education and local reputation. They pretext the restoration of the Emperor's sovereign autonomy as the motive of their insurrection, but it would seem that the pillage of government offices is the reward they chiefly seek. Their followers are in every instance persons of the lowest stamp.

The Chinese Government is said to have informed its Representative in Tokyo that an envoy will be despatched from Peking to Seoul for the purpose of negotiating a treaty of amity and commerce between China and Korea.

Monday, June 18.

A man answering to the description of Ming Chongsik, the insurgent leader, has been apprehended at Toksan, and is now undergoing examination.

Our readers are aware that Baron Shibusawa and Mr. Asano Soichiro recently applied for a concession to utilize the water of the Han river for supplying Seoul with water power. It is stated that the application has been passed by Mr. Pak, Prime Minister, and that it is now in the hands of the Minister of Agriculture and Commerce who will probably sanction it in a few days.

It would appear that there has been some misapprehension as to the Russian Government's attitude towards the question of M. Plancon's exequatur. We learn on good authority that the Russian Government has no objection to M. Plancon receiving his exequatur from the Emperor of Japan, and that M. Plancon's continued stay in Tokyo is merely for the purpose of settling some minor questions, since a full understanding exists as to the main point between St. Petersburg and Tokyo.

Tuesday, June 12.

From Chhollado comes news that on the 7th instant 300 insurgents attacked Tamyong and committed various depredations, while 150 sacked Sunchang. Kongju and Namwon are threatened. A small body of these rioters made their appearance at Okchhon, but they were speedily dispersed. The Japanese residents of Kongju have escaped to Seoul.

At Chukpyon Bay in Kangwon-do about a hundred Japanese fishermen have been attacked and compelled to put to sea. All their buildings on shore were burned. It is stated that the general condition of this province is very disquieting.

All Japanese journals agree that these disturbances are primarily due to instigation from the anti-Japanese party in the Imperial Court. There are two leaders, Ming Chongsik, already spoken of, and Chhooikhon. They are said to be in possession of orders from the Court to foment insurrection. The Fiji Shimpo, while considering it an exaggeration to say that the eight provinces of Korea are honeycombed with anti-Japanese sedition, nevertheless admits that such a feeling underlies the present insurrections. The fact is not strange. Japan has to deal with conditions not dissimilar to those found by England in South Africa, by Germany in South-west Africa and by America in the Philippines. The trouble in Korea's case is that the insurgents have the countenance of the Imperial Court in Seoul and that their disaffection is fomented by some foreign missionaries also. There is nothing for it except to deal resolutely with the matter: stamp out insurrection and demonstrate conclusively that it has no chance of success. Any hesitation on Japan's part may only afford an opening for foreign intervention.

We believe it to be beyond question that the weak, vacillating, sovereign who, to Korea's great misfortune, now regulates her affairs, is at the bottom of all this trouble. Having been himself perpetually intrigued against during his very unquiet reign, his Majesty seems to have learned to believe that he must himself be an intriguer. A man who, immediately after his flight to the Russian Legation, could open negotiations with those from whom he was supposed to have fled as well as with other Powers, is obviously not trustworthy in any crisis. Every attempt to preserve to him any administrative competence seems to mean merely that weapons of mischief are put into his hands. Japan can not be held blameless in this matter. If the conduct of the adventurers whom Marquis Ito calls furyō no tomogara had been different from what it has been, the Korean people would not now be so ready to join insurrections for the expulsion of their Japanese visitors. All that can be said is that no nation can claim a clean record in this respect: it becomes ultimately a question of comparative guilt. Meanwhile Japan must go through with her task in Korea. The nation will ultimately profit immensely by her interference though its Sovereign exposes it to needless suffering by his endeavours to cling to power.

There has been a complication about the action of the Korean Emperor in appointing Mr. Ming Yongkyu to the post of Gisei Daijin during the absence of Marquis Ito. Before the Marquis left Seoul he had audience with the Emperor, on which occasion he expressed a hope that no Cabinet changes or nominations would be made during his absence. The Emperor willingly consented, but one of his Majesty's first acts was to appoint Ming to a post which is the highest in Korea, being above that of even the Prime Minister (Sansei Daijin). Mr. Tsuruharu, the acting Resident-General, sought from the Court an explanation of this act, and after some circumlocution on the part of the Korean officials, obtained an assurance that the office of Mr. Ming was purely ceremonial, and not in any sense political, his functions being limited to the regulation of affairs connected with the Prince Imperial's wedding. It appears, from an explanation attributed to Mr. Kato, Adviser to the Korean Court, that the abolition of this office of Gisei Daijin came up for consideration last year, when Marquis Ito insisted on the essential reform of completely dissociating the Court and the Cabinet. The Koreans, however, showed themselves very anxious to preserve the title, their view being that it concerned their Court ceremonials. In consequence of the recent occurrence, however, the title has now been changed to Tenrei Daijin, so that there can not be any doubt whatever about the character of Mr. Ming's functions. It is nevertheless believed in Japan that this appointment made during Marquis Ito's absence was a deliberate attempt on the part of the Emperor to reassert his authority, and that he was instigated to it by his foreign advisers who appear to be quite oblivious of the suffering they may ultimately inflict on Korea by their pernicious counsels.

Wednesday, June 13.

The news of the disturbances in Kwangwon-do is confirmed, as are also the facts that 100 Japanese fishermen in Chupyon Bay have been obliged to take to their boats to escape and that all their buildings on shore were destroyed. The Chiyoda and the Tatsuta have been ordered to proceed to the place, as pirates are also reported to be helping the trouble.

In Chihollado a party of 2 Japanese constables and 6 Koreans have been attacked, apparently by the insurgents from Koksan, and thus far only one Japanese and one Korean are known to have escaped. The rioters are pillaging freely in this province.

Chinese pirates have made their appearance at the mouth of the Tadong River. They have boarded and robbed a Chinese junk, and on a requisition from the Chinese Consul in Pyongyang a party of Japanese constables have been sent to attack the marauders.

Thursday, June 14.

The condition of the insurgents at Konju in Chihollado is so threatening that it has been decided to send a squadron of cavalry to deal with them. On the 9th instant a body of these insurgents numbering 180 are reported to have entered Kokson, where they obtained a few rifles with ammunition and 500 yen in money by raiding the local offices. On the following morning they repeated the performance at Sunchhon, securing at the latter place 2,000 yen and demanding that a levy of 200 men should be placed at their disposal. It appears that the local headman of Sunchhon took part with the insurgents. But a later telegram says that on the 11th a force of Korean troops attacked and captured Sunchhon. These troops had set out from Chongju. On the 12th they captured the Wi Pyon leader, Chhoi Ikhyon with 12 of his principal followers. What nature of attack and defence was adopted the telegram does not indicate but these insurgents must have differed radically from those quelled by the Japanese at Hongju for there were no casualties on either side.

An apparently important arrest has been made in Seoul; that of a distinguished scholar, Kim Hseungmun. This person seems to have formed a plot to secure Russian assistance for the purpose of recovering the Yalu island, Kan-to, which, according to his view, has fallen practically into the possession of the Chinese. His idea was to follow up this feat by the expulsion of the Japanese from Korea, and he is alleged to have obtained the approval of the Imperial Court together with a sum of 100,000 yen to meet expenses and a commission conferring extensive powers on him. Attention is rumoured to have been drawn to his proceedings, as well as to those of Mr. Hong, chief of the Investigation Bureau, by the Il Ching-hoi, who recently held a meeting at which very violent speeches were delivered, denouncing the intrigues permitted to go on in the Palace and insisting that leading members of the Government are in league with Wi Pyon and are engaged in schemes which would bring ruin on the country. The meeting became so intemperate in its use of language that it had to be dispersed but its suggestions evidently bore fruit by attracting attention to the doings of Mr. Kim and his associates. The former was arrested on the night of the 9th as he was leaving the Palace. He is spoken of as the leader of the literati in Hamyongdo and a man of great influence. The Chuo Shim-bun quotes an interesting article from the Kango Shimpo of Seoul. It explains that Li Yong-ik and his party, working in combination with the Representatives of Korea in St. Petersburg and Paris, Messrs. Li and Min, engineered the Russian attempt to repudiate Korea's denunciation of her treaties with the great Northern Power at the outbreak of the war. Having failed in this scheme, they next essayed to stir up the Wi Pyon, their idea being that if anything like a general anti-Japanese movement were displayed by the people of Korea, foreign nations would interfere. But it must be confessed that if this trouble in Korea is really inspired by anti-Japanese feeling, the insurgents follow a very perplexing route, for to on-lookers their acts seem to be prompted by motives of plunder only. They do not direct their strength against the Japanese in particular nor do they refrain from harrying their own people. Their character, in short, presents very few features of patriotism. The Yonmuri Shim-bun counsels dealing with them in an uncompromising manner. It takes the line that leniency is not understood in Korea, and that if Marquis Ito adopts that policy or is over-solicitous about the opinion of foreign Powers, he will make a serious mistake. The fact is that foreign adventurers are assisting the Koreans and encouraging them against Japan, and consequently foreign verdicts are not to be too anxiously courted in this matter.

There is a proposal on foot to increase the police force (Korean) in the peninsula by the addition of certain high officers and over 1,500 men, of whom 500 would be Japanese. The scheme is now under consideration by the Korean Government.

It is stated that no mining permits will be granted in Korea pending the issue of the projected mining law. All applications now awaiting consideration are to be returned to the applicants, and the latter will not acquire any title of priority in consequence of having been first in the field.

NATIONAL WEALTH.

We observe from correspondence and editorial remarks in the columns of local contemporaries that this journal stands credited with having propounded the doctrine that the way to estimate a country's wealth is to take for basis the ratio that the taxes bear to the taxpayer's income. We must be allowed to disavow the imputation. The truth is that a Japanese statistician, having computed the amount of this country's wealth by assessing the value of each of its assets independently, then proceeded to show, by way of corollary, that the income derived from this sum of wealth is only about twice the aggregate taxes. Now it is plainly extravagant to say that each unit of the Japanese population pays 50 per cent. of his income on the average for the support of the State, and incidentally to denouncing that hypothesis as unsound, we pointed out that since, as a matter of general knowledge and personal experience in Japan, the taxpayers' direct annual contribution to the Treasury is about five per cent. of his income, it would probably be more correct to deduce the income from the taxes on that basis, and thus ultimately to arrive at a figure for the national wealth. We did not suggest such a method as by any means conclusive, and we really must protest against being saddled with such a suggestion. As to the burden of taxation in Japan, we prefer the statements of the people themselves to the theories of statisticians. Theories are illimitable. For example: it may be roughly estimated that, if indirect and direct taxes be included, the payments in Japan average 8 yen per head of population. Indeed that seems a moderate estimate. On the other hand, the average number of persons in a Japanese family is five, and as only the head of the household pays taxes, it would appear that each household's imposts aggregate 40 yen on the average. But certain statisticians have estimated that the average annual income per household in Japan is 75 yen. Therefore the taxes exceed one-half of the income. Would any one accept such arithmetic as conclusive? Ask the Japanese themselves, the actual tax-payers, and they will tell you—at least those questioned by us have declared—that they are not conscious of any oppressive burden and that they could pay much more without any serious inconvenience. We do not advocate increased taxation. Why on earth should we? Neither do we regard it as in any sense our duty to underestimate the taxes paid by the people of Japan; though it appears to be suggested that we assign to ourselves some such metier. Surely in matters of simple arithmetic motive and sentiment may be left out of the account? We have never seen any satisfactory estimates of the wealth of Japan. They have all proved defective when subjected to ordinary tests like that noted above in the matter of taxation; and until some figure less open to objection is discovered, it is at least permissible to remain unconvinced.

THE THREE ELECTRIC RAILWAY COMPANIES.

The directors of the three electric railway companies of Tokyo, namely, the Shigai, the Densha and the Denki, have signed a preliminary agreement of amalgamation which will be submitted for final confirmation to a general meeting of shareholders on the 28th instant. The new company will have a capital of 27 million yen, represented by 540,000 shares, divided between the three former companies in the proportion of 90,000 to the Denki, 312,000 to the Shigai and 133,000 to the Densha. The amalgamation is to become an accomplished fact from the 11th of September, and all the shares must be fully paid up by the 8th of that month. These are the salient features of the agreement. The programme is to be highly commendable. It will effect a very great saving of administrative expenses and the amalgamated company will probably be able to carry on the business profitably with a small increase of fares—say a uniform fare of 4 sen apart from the tax. Had the companies remained as they are now, the fare must have been increased to 5 sen at least. It is to be hoped that the methods of the Denki Company will be imitated after amalgamation by the Shigai and the Densha, and that the public will have the satisfaction of riding in clean and comfortable cars.

Mr. Uchida, Japanese Consul-General in New York, wired to the Foreign Office on June 12th that there was no change in the raw silk market. Cotton for future delivery was steady. Stocks throughout the country were estimated at 650,000 bales.

THE RUSSO-CHINESE NEGOTIATIONS.

Mr. Fu, Chinese Representative in St. Petersburg, is said (Jiji Shimpō's correspondence) to have telegraphed to his Government urging the disadvantages of suspending the Russo-Chinese negotiations. The reasons assigned by him are not stated, but they are alleged to have impressed the Peking authorities so forcibly as to produce an immediate approach to M. Pokotiloff with a view to renewing the negotiations. We do not yet know why they have been so much delayed but all accounts suggest that Russia is endeavouring to obtain from her vis-a-vis terms which, while they would largely compensate herself for the losses she has suffered, would be exceedingly unwelcome to China. Meanwhile the news is confirmed that her subjects are given a free hand in the Kirin and Amur regions, and that they are taking full advantage of the licence, the remontrances of the local officials being met with an invariable rejoinder that so long as military government exists nothing can be done. This subject is beginning to provoke newspaper comment in Japan. The Asahi writes about it is a tone of uneasiness. The second clause of the 3rd article of the Portsmouth Treaty is quoted, the clause pledging the high contracting parties "to restore entirely and completely to the exclusive administration of China all portions of Manchuria now in the occupation or under the control of the Russian troops." Our contemporary had expected that with such a basis to build on, the Chinese authorities would easily have concluded satisfactory arrangements with Russia, but whereas they have been watchful and very suspicious of Japan's doings in southern Manchuria, they are allowing Russia to do virtually what she pleases in the two northern provinces. A situation closely analogous with that existing immediately prior to the war is thus being created, and Japan, however reluctantly, is compelled to address unpleasant remonstrances to Russia. It will be little better than a farce should this Empire hasten to open the province of Shingking while Russia keeps Kirin and the Amur region hermetically sealed except to herself. It appears to us (Japan Mail) that our contemporary shows a little too much nervousness in this matter. After all, Russia is not under any conventional obligation to restore the whole of northern Manchuria to China until the expiration of the eighteen months period. What she does in the interval and so long as her military rule continues can not be very closely scrutinized by Japan. It is for China to conclude with Russia some arrangement which will place these matters on a clear footing. More tangible is the uneasiness caused by rumours which the Novoye Vremya diligently circulates, that in view of the very great military importance of the Trans-Asian Railway its transport facilities are to be largely increased; that a branch line will be thrown out to tap Siberia; that the original project of conducting the road along the bank of the Amur will be carried out, and that a sum of 700,000 roubles has been granted for purposes of survey. The Nichi Nichi Shimbun writes on this subject of the Amur line, evidently believing that Russia has determined to revert to her original project. There can be no reason for such a step from an economical point of view. The road from Stretchensk to Habarovsk would have to be carried for a distance of 2,115 versts though a sparsely populated country with only two towns of any importance, Blagovestchensk and Aigun. It would cost over 100 millions of roubles and could not possibly pay. What is the motive? If Russia believes that Japan's attitude is now, or is likely to become, menacing, and if she considers it necessary to provide a substitute for the facilities of military transport which the Manchurian line is conventionally debarred from furnishing, she labours under an unhappy mistake. If, however, she contemplates renewing her old policy of aggression, that is another matter. Strategical considerations alone can prompt the building of such a line, and they must be very cogent considerations if they are allowed to become operative at a moment when the Empire's internal affairs are so much disturbed. Such is the view of the Nichi Nichi.

A Vice-Minister of the Waiwupu is represented by the Jiji Shimpō's Peking correspondent as alleging that the delay in the Russo-Chinese negotiations is entirely due to Russia. The latter's Minister, when pressed to show greater alacrity, always offers as an explanation the necessity of awaiting instructions from St. Petersburg, and of late he has taken to complaining that Russia alone is importuned to give effect to the notes accompanying the Portsmouth Treaty, no such pressure being brought to bear on Japan. But we can scarcely credit this, for M. Pokotiloff is an able man, and must be well aware that obviously insincere declarations injure only their formulator. Japan has performed her part loyally and quickly. She has arranged for the opening of all the conventionally designated places in Southern Manchuria, and for the restoration of a large district to Chinese jurisdiction, but we hear nothing of the opening of the nine places enumerated by the Treaty in the provinces of Kirin and Heilungkiang, neither do we hear of any district in these provinces having been replaced under Chinese jurisdiction.

The Governor of Kulong has telegraphed (Nichi Nichi Shimbun) to Peking urging that the Russian Minister be approached with the object of putting an end to Russian interference in the management of the Kulong telegraph office, and her work of constructing a line thence to Kiatka. From the Governor of Amur also Peking is said to have received a strong application that M. Pokotiloff be moved to interdict the sale of arms by the Russians to the Hungtutz and their incitement of the latter. If all these accusations against the Russians be groundless, central Asian officials must be exceedingly mendacious personages.

MANCHURIA.

Mr. Leitmann of Shanghai and his companions having recently paid a visit of inspection to Manchuria, are said to have addressed to the Representatives of England, America and Japan in Peking a document which complains that the principle of the open door and equal opportunities is not being carried out in Manchuria. Three main counts of indictment are furnished. The first is that Talien is open to Japanese subjects but not to people of other nationalities. There is no custom house and no duties are collected. Consequently Japanese merchants having access to the port enjoy a great advantage over their foreign rivals who have to send their goods to Newchwang and pay duty on them. In the second place, the liken station at Newchwang is in the hands of Japanese, and it is alleged that they discriminate in favour of their own nationals. Finally, the Japanese military authorities forcibly put into circulation war-notes and paper of the Specie Bank, which constitute an inconvenience for foreign traders. The Jiji Shimpō commenting on these complaints, says that possibly there is some truth in them, but it is still too soon to be severely critical. Only a few months have elapsed since the conclusion of the war and things could not possibly have been placed on a thoroughly satisfactory footing so soon. The opening of the port at Dalny and its freedom to all merchandise destined for Liaotung may now be said to be accomplished facts, but the question of the manner of collecting customs dues in the case of goods going beyond the Liaotung limits remains to be settled, and it is a question presenting some difficulties. A little patience should be exercised.

The Hochi Shimbun has a telegram from Peking saying that a party of Russian railway guards recently made a disturbance at a Chinese house in the neighbourhood of Kirin and fusilladed thirteen Chinese subjects. The matter proved incapable of adjustment by the local authorities and had to be submitted to the capital where it is now under discussion between M. Pokotiloff and the Waiwupu. It seems strange that there should have been Russian railway guards in the neighbourhood of Kirin.

It is said that the Peking Government has decided to send General Ma to Manchuria as military governor-general. This officer commanded the troops which fruitlessly opposed the march of the allies to Peking at the time of the Boxer emeute, and during the Russo-Japanese war he had his headquarters in the region on the southwest of the Liao where his function was to guard against Russian breaches of China's neutrality.

News from Newchwang speaks of the activity of a body of 300 Hungtutz who have their retreat in the hills in a locality which we can not identify. Five hundred soldiers sent against them from Mukden have suffered severely and have failed to accomplish anything. Altogether Manchuria appears to be in a very disturbed condition. With reference to the recent capture of 3,000 stand of rifles and some millions of rounds of ammunition by the bandits, it would now seem that no Japanese troops were concerned and that the railway was not in use. The incident took place between Changtu and Supingchieh where the railway is not open to traffic and the arms and ammunition were guarded by Chinese soldiers, of whom 8 were killed and 46 wounded by the Hungtutz.

The Nichi Nichi Shimbun and other journals have an interesting note on the Fushun coal mine. We read that the seam of coal is from 100 to 120 feet thick, and that it extends to a width of 10 miles. Experts say that there is no such deposit of coal known to exist elsewhere in the world. It would be easy to obtain seven or eight thousand tons daily, when the new American machinery is adopted, but the Japanese Government does not desire to inaugurate any keen competition with the home mineral, and consequently the production will be limited to some 3,000 tons, varying, of course, according to demand. The coal, it is estimated, can be taken from the mine at a cost of 1.20 yen per ton. The expense of carriage to Dalny (270 miles) is now 2 sen per mile, but it will be reduced to one sen. The cost of handling is calculated at 1.50 yen, and the freight to Shanghai will represent 3.50 yen.

THE COMPETITION ON THE SHANGHAI-YOKOHAMA LINE.

The Shogyo Shimpō, referring to the subject of the competition which has sprung up on the Shanghai line between the Nippon Yusen Kaisha and Messrs. Butterfield and Swire, has a note which suggests that the attitude of the foreign firm is viewed with some umbrage in Japan. It is implied, if not plainly stated, that Messrs. Butterfield and Swire are utilizing the experience and the profits gained by them when their steamers were employed by the Nippon Yusen Kaisha on the Shanghai line during the war. Moreover, the Shanghai route was purchased by the late Mr. Iwasaki Yataro from the Pacific S.S. Company for $800,000, and this consideration added to a determination that no foreign company shall be allowed to invade waters geographically designated as a proper scene for Japanese maritime enterprise, is swaying the Nippon Yusen Kaisha to compete to the bitter end. Extra steamers are being put on the line and freights lowered.

Some allusions made by Japanese journals to the competition between the Nippon Yusen Kaisha and Messrs. Butterfield & Swire on the Shanghai-Yokohama line have been translated into these columns without comment, further than an expression of opinion that the Shogyo Shimpō's last note on the subject suggested that the attitude of the foreign firm was viewed with some umbrage in Japan. Exception is taken to our procedure by the Japan Gazette, which thinks that we should have "ascertained the position of the foreign firm in this matter before launching our own suggestion of Japanese umbrage." There was not the slightest reason to "ascertain the position" of the foreign firm. We were concerned with the contents of Japanese journals only, nor can we see that any post-facto explanation of its position obtained by us from the foreign firm would have changed the inference conveyed by the Japanese newspaper's writing. The Shogyo Shimpō's words created the unequivocal impression, and were apparently intended to create it, that Messrs. Butterfield and Swire were taking questionable, if not actually mean, advantage of experience and profits gained by them while their steamers were chartered by the Nippon Yusen Kaisha for the Shanghai line. We should not for one instant think of addressing any query to Messrs. Butterfield and Swire on such a subject. A firm of their reputation stands quite above all insinuations of the kind. It would be an insult to ask for a disavowal. On the other hand, it is plainly our duty to keep our readers informed as to the utterances of leading Japanese journals on subjects of common interest. These considerations amply explain our procedure. For the rest, we think that the Shogyo Shimpō's attitude is somewhat misinterpreted by the Japan Gazette, but that is a matter which need not be now discussed.

There is evidently a misunderstanding as to the meaning of a note recently published by the Shogyo Shimpō and reproduced in these columns on the subject of the competition between the Nippon Yusen Kaisha and Messrs. Butterfield and Swire on the Yokohama-Shanghai line. The Japanese journal is supposed to have claimed that because Mr. Iwasaki Yataro purchased the service of the Pacific Mail Company on this route, therefore the Nippon Yusen Kaisha, Mr. Iwasaki's inheritor, has an exclusive right to work the line. Such a claim would be quite absurd. It has never been advanced by the Shogyo Shimpō, so far as we can see. The words of the Shogyo are:—"In the days of the Mitsubishi the original Iwasaki Yataro spent 800,000 yen on the purchase of this line from the American Pacific Mail, and moreover the line is a profitable one in Japanese waters, so that to abandon it to the invasion of foreign ships would be, they think, altogether wrong" (Kono kōro wa Mitsubishi jidai ni moto no Iwasaki Yataro ga 800,000 yen wo dashite Beikoku no Pacific Mail yori kaitōritaru mono nite katsu Nippon no kowan ni okeru riyeki aru koro ni gaikoku-sen no shinnyū two honin suru wa danjite fuka nari to nasu). There is here no question whatever of claiming any monopoly of the line. Such a claim would be quite untenable. What the Shogyo Shimpō plainly means and what it says almost as plainly, is that Mr. Iwasaki Yataro having spent a large sum to acquire a footing in the Shanghai line, his successors, the Nippon Yusen Kaisha, have no idea of being driven off the line without a very keen struggle. It can not be denied for a moment, nor is it denied so far as we can ascertain, that any and every other steam-ship company is entitled to place vessels on the same route if such companies think it worth their while to do so. As to the statement made by the Shogyo that Messrs. Butterfield & Swire, when their ships were chartered by the Nippon Yusen Kaisha during the war, acquired such experience of the Shanghai route and moreover found it so profitable that they resolved to continue the service even after the charters had expired, it will of course be scoffed at by Englishmen in so far as it suggests that any unfair advantage has been taken by the British firm. We may refer here to another statement made incidentally by a Japanese journal, namely, that the Nippon Yusen Kaisha proposed a pool. On inquiry at the head office of the Japanese Company we find that no such proposal can have been authoritatively made. The Nippon Yusen Kaisha are quite prepared to encounter competition and to meet it by using only such weapons as are universally approved. That is precisely the attitude of Messrs. Butterfield and Swire, as we understand it. The two companies are already competing keenly on the Swatow-Bangkok line, and they face each other on the Shanghai line in the same spirit of straightforward rivalry. Let the fitter survive. There will be plenty of sympathy with both parties, and probably before the struggle is over some unpleasant paragraphs will appear in journalistic columns. But neither of the competitors, it is to be hoped, will fall into the error of supposing that everything published in newspapers is inspired by the other side. Editors have their own prejudices and reporters are not always trustworthy. It is an open secret, we believe, that no foreign firm showed greater courtesy during the war to the Nippon Yusen Kaisha than Messrs. Butterfield and Swire, and there are consequently grounds for regretting the present competition between the two, but of course no one expects that a service which the Nippon Yusen Kaisha has carried on successfully for nearly 30 years ought to be abandoned by it at the first aspect of foreign competition. There should be no sentiment in business. We greatly doubt whether there is room for new vessels on the Shanghai line, seeing that the various services of the Japanese Company already furnish an average of nearly one steamer every second day. But Messrs. Butterfield and Swire know well what they are about.

We observe in Japanese journals two statements which require correction. One is that the steamers now placed by Messrs. Butterfield and Swire on the Yokohama-Shanghai line are old boats; the other, that the British firm has very inferior landing facilities at Shanghai. Both assertions, as we have ascertained on the best authority, are quite incorrect, and we venture to affirm that neither of them was inspired by the other party to the competition, namely, the Nippon Yusen Kaisha. Japanese journals are naturally much interested in this competition, and we can not be surprised if some of them show their interest by readiness to credit and to circulate rumours injurious to the British Company. But the above two allegations are altogether too extravagant seeing that the steamers in question are quite new and that Messrs. Butterfield and Swire's wharfage and warehousing accommodation at Shanghai is quite in the first rank. The trouble is that people will be ready to place upon the Nippon Yusen Kaisha's shoulders the responsibility of having inspired these rumours, a course which that Company would not descend to pursue. It is much to be desired in the interests of Japanese commercial reputation that no back-stairs' device of any kind should be resorted to against the Yokohama firm. The competition is a fair struggle and competitors should be left to fight the battle on its merits in a perfectly straightforward manner. That is doubtless their own inclination and determination.

MR. UCHIDA ON CHINA.

We have already alluded to an interesting lecture delivered by Mr. Uchida, former Japanese Representative in Peking, before the Toho Kyokai on the 7th instant. We now translate it, being convinced that our readers will be glad to learn what a high Japanese official of exceptional experience has to say on a subject so important:—"During my four and a half years of residence in China there were some points which I took cognisance of, and I wish to speak to you of them to-night as a member of this society. They relate to the problem of education in the Middle Kingdom. There are now some ten thousand Chinese students in Japan, and this brings the matter home very forcibly not only to China but also to Japan, so that I should like to state my views and hear your criticism of them. The manner in which China, after the Boxer emeute, applied herself to national reform in various directions finds a close parallel in the story of the numerous reforms that had their inception in Japan after the conflicts at Fushimi and Toba, or, to go a little further back, after the time of Perry's coming. I am not praising the Boxer emeute or attempting to excuse it, but had it not occurred China's recent reforms would not have taken place nor would there have been a Russo-Japanese war. Unlooked for results are begotten of unlooked for incidents. The lawless Boxer outbreak gave her vitality to the China of to-day. When I arrived in Peking it was just about the time of the Court's return from Hsian and among the various reforms then upon the tapis that of education received the attention of Chinese officialdom. I was frequently consulted about it by the Peking Board of Education, and I gave the best advice in my power with a sincere desire to aid the Chinese. All my suggestions were adopted, and the despatch of Japanese teachers to Peking and Tientsin was thus inaugurated. Thereafter things progressed until they reached their present condition. How the relation will hold in the future I do not know, but if it be well directed it should lead to a good result, and I pray that it may. In our country the most conspicuous change in the sequel of the fights at Fushimi and Toba was the abolition of the clans and the establishment of prefectures, and the most striking political change in China after the Boxer émeute was, I think, the abolition of the civil-service examination system. That system may be said to have been the life of the Chinese Government and the source of its administration. Just as the abolition of the clans and the establishment of prefectures opened in our case a new firmament, so the abolition of the examination system gave to China a marked change of fortune. Millions of brains which the examination system had blighted are now altered and are seeking the new learning at our hands. It is unavoidable that many evils and abuses should attend the system of study abroad, but if extreme cases be suitably restrained and if proper attention be paid where occasion demands it, I do not think there is any special cause for uneasiness. Viceroy Yuan, for instance, speaks of sending a hundred thousand or two hundred thousand students to Japan. That may happen. Japan must be prepared to exercise full care in receiving them; that is to say, she cannot not only give them secular education, but must also pay particular attention to the moral influence she produces on them. According to my observation Japanese and foreigners alike still entertain a false view about the Chinese. It is a very great mistake to despise the Chinese because they were broken in their conflict with Japan and because they occupied the position of mere onlookers during the Russo-Japanese war. There is no greater misconception than to compare China to Turkey. The two are quite different. In China the Government is poor but the country is rich. The appliances of civilization have not yet been adopted, nevertheless things are extremely plentiful in the country. Moreover, some observers, foreign and Japanese, argue that the absence of good roads in China is a sign of national decay, but it used to be the policy of the Chinese Government not to build roads, and when they understand their mistake they will at once amend it. The opening of railways proves it, for are not railways the most advanced form of roads? At Peking, indeed, great highways are now in increasing course of construction, and the result in that the Legation quarter which was so proud of its arrangements has now become a very poor kind of place by comparison. Tientsin is even better than Peking. A public park has been made there and Viceroy Yuan is bent upon constructing an ideal town. Then, simultaneously with the completion of railways, the building of roads, the progress of the postal system and the employment in official positions of all persons who possess the new learning—the application of all these reforms is constantly being extended and the appliances of civilization are being perfected. Thus to regard China now as though she were still in the days prior to the abolition of the civil-service examinations is as though one were to light a candle at mid-day. The Chinese are strongly disposed to have recourse to Japanese education and at the same time they all agree in asking that Japanese teachers should be more painstaking, and they complain that some Japanese schools regard the Chinese students merely as sources of income. For instance, when only five subjects have been studied, certificates of graduation are given for ten, and instruction which ought to last for 5 years is compressed into one year or half a year. If such charges be accurate it is little to our credit. Not less wrong is it to send cast-off teachers to China. The sum of the matter is that we must deal with China in matters of education according to the dictates of true neighbourly sincerity and kindness."

HOTEL ACCOMMODATION IN JAPAN.

Recently the Tokyo Chamber of Commerce passed a resolution in the sense that greater facilities should be provided for foreigners visiting Japan. Since then consultations have taken place between the various bodies interested, and on the 7th instant a committee was formed, which held its first meeting in the rooms of the Tokyo Chamber of Commerce on the 8th from 3 p.m. The committee consists of 5 members from the Tokyo Prefectural Assembly, 3 from the City Council, 2 from the City Assembly, 15 from the Chamber of Commerce, 3 from the Business Men's Association and 3 from the Welcome Society, 31 in all.

It was explained in a recent issue that a Council or Committee had been appointed by several public bodies in Tokyo for the purpose of considering ways and means of securing good accommodation and other facilities for foreign tourists visiting Japan. The Council held its first meeting in a hall of the Tokyo Chamber of Commerce on the 8th instant. Mr. Nakano Buyei, President of the Chamber, and a member of the House of Representatives, gave it as his opinion that the building now used for the purposes of the Department of Agriculture and Commerce should be given up to make a hotel, that the work of keeping it up should be entrusted to the Railway Operating Bureau, and that the Government should be approached with a view to effecting these things. No one seems to have opposed these extraordinary projects; extraordinary because the building in question was not designed for a hotel, could scarcely be rendered even tolerably suited for such a purpose, and is not well situated; and doubly extraordinary because of the proposal to impose the duty of hotel-keeping on the officials of the Railway Operating Bureau, who know nothing whatever about such work and are eminently unfitted to undertake it. Other committee-men urged that persons establishing hotels at places of note in Japan should receive Government protection, to which end a bill should be drafted under the title of "bill for encouraging hotel construction" (hotel ken-chiku no shōrei-an). No definite decision was adopted concerning these matters, but a resolution was adopted to elect a consultative committee of two each from all the bodies represented to negotiate with the Government, and that the results of the negotiation should be taken as a basis for a final decision. The consultative committee consists of the following as thereupon elected:—From the Chamber of Commerce, Messrs. Nakano Buyei and Inoyue Kaku-goro; from the Tokyo City Council, Messrs. Ooka Ikuzo and Yoshikawa Sentaro; from the Business Men's Guild, Messrs. Kobayashi Umejiro and Iwade Sobei; from the Welcome Society, Count Hirotsawa and Mr. Okura Kihachiro; and from the Tokyo Prefectural Assembly, Mr. Tanioka Keiji.

In reply to the suggestions of the subcommittee alluded to in recent issues, the Prime Minister is said to have stated that he could not recommend the abandonment of an important Government building for conversion into a hotel, and the Minister of State of Finance gave a noncommittal answer. The Minister of State for Foreign Affairs, however, spoke out quite plainly. His Excellency considered that if the Noshomusho's office was taken for such a purpose, its roof alone would be found available. The internal arrangements would have to undergo such a complete change that they would practically be metamorphosed. Even then, too, it was doubtful whether the edifice could be made really serviceable for hotel purposes. Viscount Hayashi thought it would be much wiser for the projectors to go to work boldly and build a new edifice with all proper conveniences and appliances. An excellent site might be found on the Mitsubishi land outside the Babasaka gate, and there need not be any expropriations or make-shifts. That is precisely the view we ourselves take. The requirements of a modern hotel are quite underestimated when it is supposed that any building, for whatever purpose originally erected, can be converted into a first-class inn. Professor Mitsukuri, we observe, has been writing on this subject, and writing very interestingly. His view, briefly summarized, is that what foreigners come to Japan to see is not the raw Japan in its Occidental garb—high-collar Japan as he calls it—but the Japan described by Lafcadio Hearn. Therefore instead of erecting an edifice for a hotel in foreign style, the Professor suggests that a big Japanese yadaya should be provided within a spacious Japanese garden in the pure style of the country. This thesis is very eloquently elaborated by the Professor. It would be, we believe, a grievous failure. Certainly foreign visitors want to see old Japan, but they have no desire that they themselves should be made part of the payment. They desire above all things to be comfortable on their travels; to take their ease in their inn, and though they might be glad to have a kind of picnic once or twice in a place like the Maple Club, they would rebel immediately against a programme which involved dispensing with good square meals and four-posters.

The Minister of State for Agriculture also has declined to give up the building now occupied by his Department. He says that there is no suitable substitute. The suggestion that the official residence of the Minister of State for Justice might be used is not practical, for the officials of the Department number 600 and require a building of very large dimensions. At the same time the Minister expresses his sympathy with the scheme of supplying Tokyo with a good hotel.

FIRES.

At 4 p.m. on June 8th, fire broke in the village of Tako, Kamo district, Idzu peninsula, destroying three hundred houses, one warehouse, and fifty sheds. Five firemen were injured. The negligence of bath-house employees is reported to be the cause.

On June 12th, fire broke out in the district of Nishimura, Yamagata prefecture, destroying 112 buildings, including a police office.

Fire occurred on the evening of June 12th in the Commercial and Industrial School, Kojimachi-ku, Tokyo, burning down the building.

About 3.30 a.m. on Wednesday, fire occurred in one of the upper rooms of the Chinese printing office of Tong-Cheong, No. 51 Yokohama. The flames were put out before they could spread over the building. Parts of the ceiling and roof were slightly damaged. A lamp was the cause.

AD INTERESTING MINISTERIAL INSTRUCTION.

Mr. Makino, Minister of State for Education, has just issued an instruction which suggests that things are not so satisfactory as is superficially apparent in the condition of the rising generation. "It is scarcely necessary to say," observes his Excellency, "that the duty of scholars and students is to have a steadfast mind, to propose to themselves a fixed purpose, and to look forward to achieving great results by zeal and diligence. * * * Nevertheless among the youth of both sexes I detect, to my great regret, a tendency to occasional despondency and to ethical decadence. Certain of those now in the schools show an inclination to luxury, or torment themselves about empty theories, or, in extreme cases, allow their minds to become absorbed in dissipation and, violating the precepts of virtue, lose their sense of shame. * * * Unless steps be presently taken to severely reprimand these errors, their harmful results will be incalculable. There are signs that the trend of a part of society is towards insincerity and that the youth of both sexes are being led astray in increasing degree. Especially is this the case with recent publications and pictures, for these either ventilate extreme doctrines, or inculcate pessimistic views, or depict immoral conditions to the no small detriment of education. * * * Steps must be taken to suppress publications that suggest such danger whether within or without the schools. Again there are men who, advocating an extreme form of socialism, have recourse to various devices for leading astray students and teachers. If such views, destructive as they are towards the very foundations of nationalism and dangerous to the good order of society, obtain currency in educational circles, so as to disturb the bases of our educational system, nothing could be more regrettable in the interests of the country's future. It behoves educationists to be specially on their guard and to prepare for checking these evils before they bear fruit. Persons who occupy pedagogic positions should bear these things constantly in mind, and in coöperation with parents and guardians should endeavour to purify the habits of students and to invigorate their spirit, thus aiming at the achievement of good results for education."

This instruction appears to us very timely. For it is not to be denied that questionable publications in the shape of novels, pictures and pictorial post-cards have of late become very common. Moreover, there is something verging on a craze of reviving the customs of the Genrokuera, which was the age at once of the Tokugawa's greatest prosperity and greatest corruption. Luxurious and licentious fashions have a growing vogue. A short time ago a number of persons—37 if we remember aright—were apprehended on a charge of manufacturing Paphian pictures, and we observe frequent journalistic reference to the corruption of students. Mr. Makino, the present Minister of State for Education, is a man of very clear discernment and earnest purpose. He will not confine himself to the mere issue of an instruction but will take care that practical measures are devised to give real effect to his words.

The Kokumin Shimbum and the Nichi Nichi Shimbum are frankly laudatory in their comments on Mr. Makino's instruction, a translation of which we published in our last issue. The Yomiuri approves of the spirit and purpose but has doubts as to the feasibility of giving practical effect to the Minister's aims, and the Fiji Shimpō writes in an unusual and inexplicably carping strain. In fact the Fiji's line of reasoning seems to imply hopelessness of accomplishing anything in the shape of moral control by the aid of legislative and administrative machinery. What is the use of discussing phenomena, asks the Fiji, if their causes are left unreformed? Every great development of national spirit is accompanied by a corresponding development of luxurious proclivities, and it is not from a Department incapable of duly inspecting its own text books that the public looks for the exercise of efficient restraints upon literature in general. As for socialism, its growth is inevitable so long as a man's mental faculties are educated out of proportion to his scale of living. Knowledge and an empty stomach make bad companions; discontent is the sure outcome of their association. And it is precisely in the ranks of educationists that this incongruous conjunction is found in Japan, for no public servants are so poorly paid and no folks have such a terrible struggle to maintain respectability on an inadequate pittance as school-teachers. There is a great deal more in the same strain, but the impression it produces on us is that the writer himself finds a large "something in this world amiss," and that a little more would push him over the edge of socialism. He is on sound ground, however, when he argues that ethical reform must begin in the upper classes, and that sermons about the obligations of morality sound strange in the mouths of men who themselves ignore such restraints. But, after all, every one must work in his own sphere. The Minister of Education is not to sit with folded hands because his efforts can not be completely successful. He has his duty to do whether others neglect theirs or not. Nor do we ourselves see any valid reason why one of the reforms suggested, namely, effective scrutiny of literature in every shape so as to eliminate the pornographic elements, should not be quite feasible. The field where such abuses are practised is not large.

COAL FOR THE NAVY.

A Japanese Naval Chief Engineer, Mr. Takeda, has given to the Chuo Shimbum some interesting information about the supply of coal for the Navy. While the future of the Russo-Japanese war was still uncertain, a place for manufacturing briquettes was established at Tokuyama (in Choshu) under the superintendence of Mr. Takeda. The object was to secure an ample supply of coal for the ships. Work commenced on the 4th of April, 1905, and was carried on with one machine up to July, the number of workmen employed being 30 or 40 with 50 assistants. In July a second machine was added and 220 hands were employed. The quantity of coal made into briquettes from the time of starting the enterprise has been 100,000 tons of English mineral and 10,000 tons of that obtained in Choshu. Part of the former is still in store but the latter was all used during the war. Hereafter the briquettes will be made entirely from Choshu coal. There are two varieties of briquettes manufactured from the latter, one being for immediate use, the others for purposes of storing. The mineral is the same, but the manner of treating it is different. Working for 24 hours with two machines, from 580 to 600 tons of briquettes can be produced, and excellent results have been obtained with them. Experiments recently made on board the Chi-yoda showed that they give off only very small quantities of smoke light in colour. There is no inferiority to ordinary English coal which costs 20 yen per ton, a price which rose to 25 or 26 yen during the war. The Choshu briquettes are not expected to cost ultimately more than one-half of that amount. The industry is not yet sufficiently mature to warrant accurate statements, but the strong probability is that a ton will hereafter stand at 12 yen or less. The Choshu briquettes seem to have greater calorific strength than the English, but that may be because the latter are made from "smalls" whereas for the former lump coal is used. There is a briquette-manufacturing company in Amakusa also, and its enterprise has been very successful. When Prince Arthur of Connaught recently visited Kagoshima, the Diadem and her consorts used these briquettes with entire satisfaction. They found them the same as English coal. These briquettes are now used by Japanese torpedo-destroyers. The plant produces only 50,000 tons yearly, which could be raised to 80,000 by night work. It is difficult to choose between the Tokugawa and the Amakusa briquettes. Both have merits and demerits. One of the great advantages of briquettes is that they can be stored for any time against an hour of need. Tokugawa produces 150,000 tons yearly and Amakusa 50,000, and it is evident that the factories must be increased to meet the requirements of the Navy.

THE LAND TAX IN JAPAN.

In the Keizai Zasshi of the 9th instant we find an interesting note on the land tax in Japan. Prior to the Russo-Japanese war this tax stood at 2.5 per cent. of the assessed value of the land, but it has undergone two increases, as will be seen from the following table:—

	Original rate, per cent.	1st increase, per cent.	2nd increase, per cent.	Present rate, per cent.
Urban Building Land ...	2.5	5.5	12	20
Rural Building Land ...	2.5	3.5	2	8
Other Land .....	2.5	1.8	1.2	5.5

At these rates the Government's estimate of income from the land during the present fiscal year is as follows:—

	Yen.
Agricultural Lands .....	55,248,229
Rural Building Land .....	8,670,724
Urban " " .....	7,202,054
Various Lands .....	13,968,727
Hokkaido Lands .....	510,378
Taxes paid in arrears .....	1,695
Taxes delayed on account of natural calamities .....	21,631
Total .....	85,632,438

In order to ascertain the total land tax we must add the local taxes, 39,331,944 yen, to the above, when a grand total of 124,964,382 yen is obtained. Our contemporary then proceeds to consider whether this is a large tax as compared with the levies in former times. For the purposes of that calculation it is necessary to take the figures showing the quantity of rice formerly paid:—

	Koku.
1836 .....	12,174,629
1871 .....	12,549,354
1872 .....	12,135,195
1873 .....	11,239,712
1874 .....	10,745,982
Average of last 3 years .....	11,373,630
Quantity after Revision .....	11,819,102

Of course the quantity of rice produced was not nearly so large then as it is now. Yet if the price per koku be taken as 10 yen, it appears that from 109 to 120 million yen was paid in the form of land tax. From this it would appear that the tax-payers are at least as well off now as they were in pre-Meiji days. Naturally as a very heavy increase has been caused by the war, land holders are calling out for a reduction as soon as opportunity offers, but the grounds of their complaint are not very solid. The Kisai thinks, however, that the building-lands' tax requires revision.

NOTES ON CURRENT EVENTS.

The Gunjin Yengo-kai, formed originally for succouring the families of military men, has been dissolved. It was under the presidency of Prince Arisugawa and among the leading members were Counts Inouye and Matsukata. The final report showed that 283,000 yen had been distributed through the Home Department. The remaining 1,152,000 yen is to be handed over to the Minister of Home Affairs to be applied by him to the purposes of the Society. Prince Arisugawa congratulated the Society on its success and Counts Inouye and Matsukata replied briefly. The Emperor sent a message approving of the labours of the Society. It was conveyed through Count Inouye.

Among the most striking portraits in this year's Royal Academy is a painting by Mr. Sargent of the Hon. Mrs. Frederick Guest. The picture is described as representing the "American feminine face divine"—delicate, sensitive, sympathetic. In an able criticism of the portrait one writer remarks that "the physiognomy of Mrs. Guest is typical of the American stock which has been bred without cross-blood from the original English, and is therefore, nearer the Anglo-Saxon type of the painters of the Reynolds period than is the so-called 'Gibson girl,' who is a composite of the factors composing present-day America." This is an acute criticism and is likely to arouse discussion. The writer insinuates that the face of the Gibson girl is not a sensitive face because the heart of the Gibson girl is not a sensitive heart. Mrs. Nannie Langhorne Shaw, who has just been married to Mr. Waldorf Astor in London, is said to be a typical "Gibson Girl" and one who saw her on her wedding day remarked that he was puzzled to understand the force of the criticism that denies to this type of American womanhood the quality of sensitiveness.

According to statistics sent by the Japanese Commercial Agent at Vladivostok to the Foreign Office in Tokyo, the latest census showed 2,000 Japanese subjects in that town. Among them are 43 merchants, 7 doctors, 4 tailors, 4 washermen, 6 barbers, 2 gold-smiths, 7 clock-makers, 7 carpenters, 50 blacksmiths, and 17 lodging-house keepers. Besides the above there are 200 Japanese in Habarovsk and 250 in Nikolisk.

The Russo-Japanese Society held its first reunion since the war on the evening of the 9th instant in the Maple Club. Admiral Viscount Yenomoto, President of the Society, welcomed the Russian Representative, M. Bagmateff, who has accepted the post of Honorary President, and also M. Plancon, who with the other leading Russian residents of Tokyo were present. About fifty persons assembled, among them being Baron Hanabusa, Major-General Murata, Mr. Nakada, Baron Senge, Messrs. Ooka Ikuzo, Asaina, Uchida (of the Amur Society), etc. Viscount Yenomoto made a graceful speech, the gist of which was that Russia and Japan might now enjoy the calm which follows the storm and that Japan earnestly hoped for a renewal of their old friendly intercourse. Mr. Bagmateff said that by the grace of Providence amity had been restored between their countries and he trusted that it would widen and broaden. Even during the war there had been no unfriendliness between individual Russians and individual Japanese, and now like the warriors of old, they might sheathe their swords after the fight and clasp hands of hearty good will and friendship. For his own part his sincerest efforts would be directed towards promoting that end. These remarks elicited hearty applause, and the meeting broke up after a pleasant evening.

According to estimates made by the Department of Agriculture and Commerce the barley crop this year will be 884,556 koku (or 4.7 per cent.) larger than the crop of last year and 307,266 koku (or 1.5 per cent.) above the average yield, the average being for the 7 years from 1899 to 1908, excluding the best and the worst years. The figures since 1899 stand thus:—

	Koku.
1899 .....	19,335,952
1900 .....	20,398,385
1901 .....	20,658,217
1902 .....	18,425,626
1903 .....	13,545,105
1904 .....	19,642,242
1905 .....	18,728,939
1906 (estimate) .....	19,613,495
Average (as explained above) .....	19,306,229

On the 9th instant, Mr. Hayashi Gonsuke, hitherto Minister in Korea, was appointed Japanese Representative in Peking. There is some delay in the expected appointment of Mr. Uchida to the Legation in Vienna, but the cause of delay is said to be that the Japanese Government awaits the consummation of Austria's and Italy's resolve to raise their Tokyo Legations to Embassies. Mr. Uchida will probably not be sent until he can have ambassadorial rank. In this event it is thought that Mr. Oyama will be transferred from Rome. Mr. Inagaki, hitherto Minister for Bankok, is understood to be desirous of a change of post.

The sub-committee for investigating the subject of facilities for foreign tourists have visited the Prime Minister, the Minister for Foreign Affairs and the Minister of Finance, and have submitted Mr. Nakano's project for the conversion of the Noshomusho building into a hotel. Each of the Ministers refrained from committing himself to any definite expression of opinion, but all promised to consider the matter. We do not find that any attention is paid to the vital question of suitability. It appears to be taken for granted that a building which has hitherto served the purposes of a government office only can be converted without difficulty into a first-class hotel. We suspect, however, that by the time the necessary alterations had been effected, and by the time new offices had been provided for the Department of Agriculture and Commerce, the converted hotel building would represent an outlay much larger than the cost of a new and really suitable edifice. The one salient advantage of the plan would be celerity. If a new edifice be put up, two years at least must elapse before it is ready for occupation, whereas six months would probably suffice in the case of the Noshomusho's offices. As to the question of official incursion into the sphere of hotels, there is not much difficulty in predicting the criticisms that will be provoked, but it will be well to suspend judgement until we see what form the project will ultimately take.

We observe that the position taken by us with regard to the house-tax question is subjected to a great deal of verbose attack, the main part of which seems quite beside the mark. Our contention is simply that the Hague Court was not asked to adjudicate upon any taxes other than those leviable upon buildings as such, which stand, or may hereafter be erected, on land within the limits of the former foreign settlements. In other words, the problem to be solved by the Court was:—"Is the above land alone exempt from taxes other than those mentioned in the leases, or does the exemption extend to the buildings also which stand upon the land?" Nothing was under consideration except the buildings. Nothing else was a subject of arbitration. The arbitrators had not to decide whether the payment designated in the leases included or did not include all municipal taxes. They had to decide solely whether that payment included such taxes as are levied upon buildings in Japan. We find it very difficult to decipher clearly the position taken by our critics, but we gather that they claim for foreign residents in the settlements exemption from all municipal taxes other than such as may be supposed to be included in the so-called "land rents." If that claim be admitted the case would be very simple. But it is a claim plainly in excess of any honest interpretation of the Hague Court's finding. The only taxes now levied upon houses in Japan happen to be municipal taxes, but apart from that fortuitous connexion the Hague arbitration had nothing whatever to do with municipal taxes or with the foreign residents' liability to such imposts. No sources of municipal revenue except buildings standing on ex-settlement lands are affected by the Hague decision. With regard to all other sources, for example incomes and business, land-holders in the ex-settlements have precisely the same liability as Japanese subjects. That is our interpretation of the case.

In the columns of the Nippon we find a statement of the local debts of Japan and the rates of interest they carry. It appears that the total is 65,704,886 yen, of which Osaka's portion is 23,150,889 yen, and Tokyo's is 6,057,151 yen. As to the rates of interest, the following figures are given:—

	Yen.
At over 15 per cent. ....	349,474
" 12 " .....	1,315,678
" 10 " .....	2,906,681
" 8 " .....	9,268,241
" 7 " .....	6,391,634
" 6 " .....	25,010,867
At less than 6 per cent. ....	20,387,175
Without Interest .....	75,136

It will thus be seen that the debts bearing interest higher than 7 per cent. total 19,900,000 yen. The dearest money has been obtained by the small administrative districts.

There is—according to the Kokumin—a forest of vast extent and great value at Ari-san in the Kagi district of Formosa. It consists almost entirely of big hi-no-ki, a wood in keen demand for Japanese building purposes, but to exploit it properly would require the construction of a railway and the outlay of four or five million yen. Hitherto the Government of Formosa is said to have been in doubt as to whether the enterprise should be carried on under official auspices, or whether it should be ceded to private hands. The latter course is said to have been adopted, and if a solid company with a capital of at least a million yen can be organized, it would probably obtain the concession. Dendrological experts have been sent from Awomori, Tokyo, and Akita for the purpose of exploring and reporting on the forest.

Japanese journals publish a copy of a covenant said to have been made by a Russian subject named Ponikaroffsky and a Japanese subject, Sato Heisoku, with regard to the Kamchatkan fisheries. The covenant covers the whole of the east and west coasts of Kamchatka. Nominally it provides that the Russian signatory shall purchase fish from the inhabitants and sell them to the Japanese at cost price plus a commission of 20 yen per 1,000 salmon and 8 roubles per 1,000 masu, but the terms of the agreement indicate clearly enough that Mr. Ponikaroffsky's share in the transaction is to be limited to receiving the commission, and that all the work of collecting the fish will be done by Mr. Sato's people. In fact it would seem that a royalty over these fishing grounds is possessed by the Russian and that he has farmed the grounds to the Japanese.

According to information received by the Foreign Office, the new Russian S.S. Company is to establish connexion between Tsuruga in Echizen and the terminus of the Siberian Railway, namely Vladivostok. The service will be commenced with the Mongolia on the 21st instant. The same company is to place two or three steamers on the Vladivostok—Nagasaki—Shanghai route.

An Imperial Ordinance just issued endues the Minister of State for Agriculture and Commerce with power to set limits to the districts exploited by hunters of seals and sea-otters, and to enforce the restriction. This power may be exercised even in the case of companies to which charters have already been issued. This evidently indicates that the Government is alive to the necessity of preserving the rookeries in Saghalien.

On the 12th instant the Red Cross Society held an ordinary and extraordinary meeting at Uyeno. The Empress attended and there was an enormous concourse of members, the meeting being regarded as a celebration after the war, to which the Society sent 5,000 physicians and nurses who attended to over 700,000 officers and soldiers. Among these employees of the Society there were 100 deaths on service, namely, 39 women and 61 men. The Society was formed in 1877 by the exertions of the late Count Sano and Viscount Ogyu. It was then a very small organization, known as the Hakuai-sha (Society of Mercy) and although in 1886 it joined the Geneva Convention and became the Red Cross Society of Japan, its growth did not become signal until the China-Japan war of 1894-5. In 1887 it had but 10,000 members, whereas in 1904 there were 920,000 names on the roll. To-day the number is 1,152,204, and the yearly income is 3,772,500 yen. There are 35 honorary members, 697 who possess decorations of merit, and 9,033 special members. The Chairman is Count Matsukata and the President H.I.H. Prince Kanin.

King Edward has conferred the Grand Cross of the Bath on General Terauchi. In his covering despatch the British Ambassador says that the distinction is intended to mark his Majesty's appreciation of the courteous and considerate treatment extended to British officers by the Japanese in the field, and to express the King's admiration of the eminently able manner in which, as Minister of War, General Terauchi discharged his important and onerous duties. The General has not as yet received any Japanese patent of nobility. He therefore becomes Sir Seiki Terauchi, for the time being.

The British Squadron under its new commander-in-chief is making a kind of tour of the Japanese ports. It is now in Kago-shima, whence it will proceed to Nagasaki, Ujina and Kobe, finally reaching Yokohama. The Japanese think that special welcome should be given to the fleet since it has changed Admirals, and accordingly Kago-shima set the example by some very animated doings on the 11th instant. The officers were invited to an entertainment on shore where various performances were organized for their amusement and finally a cold collation was served in the Kakumeikwan. Various presents are said to have been given in the form of Satsuma-ware vases, handkerchiefs, tobacco, pictorial postcards and other small tokens.

An Imperial Ordinance declares that the hitherto existing Tokyo Gakushi-kwai shall henceforth be called the Gakushi-in and shall occupy in the scholastic world of Japan a place similar to that held by the Royal Society in England and the Academy in France. The membership is limited to sixty, with power to elect as kaku-in any foreigners who have contributed conspicuously to the spread of learning or literature in Japan. A report of proceedings has to be addressed to the Minister of State for Education once a year, and the Society is empowered to place itself in communication with all similar bodies in foreign countries.

It appears that the proceeds of the Formosan Lottery are to be devoted solely to charity, sanitation and hospitals. The original rumour said that public works would be included. Detailed regulations have not yet been published.

Captain Sayama, who is directing the operations of salvage at the scene of the Novik's disaster in Chitose Bay, telegraphs under date of the 12th that there does not appear to be any injury sufficient to prevent re-floating.

Yachtsmen will be glad to learn that H. E. Luke H. Wright, the American Ambassador, has kindly promised to present a Cup for the Fourth of July Yacht Race of the Yokohama Yacht Club.

INTERPORT YACHTING.

We are in receipt of a telegram from our Kobe correspondent stating that Kobe won the interport sailing races, securing two races in succession. The contests took place on Saturday, the first starting at 10.30 a.m., Yokohama was represented by Messrs. Poole and Ross and Kobe by Messrs. Fawcner and Archer and the visitors were in the dinghy May, Kobe sailing Cormorant. Kobe won the first race by three minutes.

The second race which was started at 2.30 p.m. also resulted in favour of the southern port. In this case the crews changed over, Yokohama taking Cormorant and Kobe May. Kobe won by two minutes.

It was a dull day and heavy rain fell in the afternoon. The band of the American flagship Ohio played during the afternoon at the Boathouse. Two events were contested by the officers and crews of the American warships in port. One of these, a race for officers in the ships' dinghies resulted as follows: (1) Ohio; (2) Chattanooga; (3) Galveston. The other event, a victory for the men of the Chattanooga, the Galvestons being second, and the Ohios third.

FUNERAL OF MRS. HAM.

On Saturday morning the funeral took place of Mrs. W. J. Ham, who died on Thursday in the General Hospital from blood poisoning. The deceased lady, who was but 23 years of age, had given birth to her second child only a month before and deep sympathy was felt and expressed over the sad circumstances in which she passed away.

The service was held at the Church of the Sacred Heart, Father Pettier officiating. Mr. Ham was chief mourner, being accompanied by Mr. N. Morgan, father of the deceased, and Mr. N. M. Morgan, her brother. The pallbearers, who were members of the Oddfellows Lodge, were Messrs W. Pepper, H. Ivison, H. Feser, A. Keller, J. H. Schmidt and R. B. Denning.

A feature of the ceremony was the presence of all the men attached to the Fire Brigade, of which the deceased lady's father is Superintendent. The men were in new uniforms, and, bearing wreaths, preceded the funeral procession to the cemetery after the service in the Church. There were many and beautiful floral tributes.

DEATH OF SIR HALLIDAY MACARTNEY.

The death is announced of Sir Halliday Macartney, K.C.M.G., whose resignation of his post of Councillor and English Secretary of the Chinese Legation in London was only recently made public. According to "Men and Women of the Time" he was the son of Robert Macartney, of Dundrennan, Kirkcudbrightshire, and was born in 1833, being educated for the medical profession at the Edinburgh University.

In 1856, during his student days, he joined a contingent of volunteers being raised for the Turkish army, and served through the Crimea, studying Turkish at the same time. Returning to Edinburgh he graduated M.D., and entered the Army Medical Service as Surgeon in the 99th Regiment, at that time under orders for India, where the Mutiny had broken out. The regiment arrived too late at Calcutta for its services to be required, and was sent on to China, where Macartney was present at the taking of the Taku Forts, the attack on Peking, and the sacking of the Summer Palace. Remaining in China after the peace, he took service under the Imperial Government, 1862, being granted military rank and command together with General Gordon, of whom he was the friend. As an officer in the Celestial army, he drilled a force of 3000 men, which operated with success against the Taepings. He also established a military arsenal at Nankin, of which he was Governor for twelve years till 1876. He was then sent to England on a special mission in connection with the Margary incident. A permanent mission being resolved upon by China, he became its European Secretary, and as such paid frequent visits to the principal European capitals. He attended the coronation of the present Czar's father, and was present at many of the principal State functions at home and abroad. He was officially described as Councillor and English Secretary to the Chinese Legation in London, and his unrivalled knowledge of the Chinese language, customs, and policy, led to his being described by Anglo-Chinese officials as "a thorough Chinaman." He received the honour of the C.M.G. in 1881, and the K.C.M.G. in 1885, and has been decorated with the Orders of the Precious Star and the Double Dragon. In 1884 he married Jeanne, daughter of J. L. de Sautoy who died in 1902.

JAPAN IN KOREA.

THE Japanese are evidently much interested in the news coming from Russia, especially a telegram dated St. Petersburg May 21st and published by the Japan Advertiser on June 2nd. No one knows anything about the authority for this message. It may have embodied nothing more valuable than a sensational newspaper correspondent's ideas. But it may also have been an accurate analysis of the situation. It represented Russia as determined to dispute the line adopted by Japan in Korea, and to denounce her to the Powers on the ground that by the establishment of a Residency-general in Seoul and the posting of a garrison in Korea, she has palpably exceeded the position accorded to her by the Portsmouth Treaty. "Grave results" were said to be anticipated from this action by Russia, and the telegram added that certain diplomats judged the event to herald another war with Japan. The whole story appears to us quite unworthy of credence. Nothing could be more explicit than the language of the Portsmouth Treaty. By that document Russia "acknowledged that Japan possesses in Korea paramount political, military and economical interests," and "engaged neither to obstruct nor to interfere with the measures of guidance, protection and control which the Imperial Government of Japan might find it necessary to take in Korea." In the face of such pledges it is quite inconceivable that any responsible Russian statesmen should assume the attitude attributed to them by the above telegram and by corresponding pieces of intelligence received through other channels. Russia has solemnly ruled herself out of every title to query Japan's doings in Korea. The language of the covenant is quite unequivocal: it can not be misinterpreted, and the strongest evidence will be needed to convince any thoughtful person that Russia seeks to misinterpret it. The only appreciable ground for uneasiness, so far as we can see, is the action of St. Petersburg with regard to M. PLANCON. In insisting that her Consul-General must receive his exequatur from the Emperor of KOREA Russia takes a line which seems to imply that she refuses to recognise Japan's attitude in Seoul. Moreover, it appears to be a wanton refusal, or, at best, a mere point of unreasoning pride. There exists no treaty between Russia and Korea. The latter, on allying herself with Russia's enemy at the outset of the war, denounced her treaty with the former. She had an unquestionable right to denounce it. Therefore Russia has no title to post a Consul or a Consul-General at any place in the Korean Empire, pending the negotiation of a new treaty. It may be urged, however, that the absence of a treaty does not indicate Japan as the proper authority to issue an exequatur. But here comes in the Portsmouth Treaty which binds Russia, neither to obstruct nor to interfere with the measures of guidance, protection and control which the Imperial Government of Japan find it necessary to take in Korea." One of those measures has been Korea's deprivation of power to manage her own foreign affairs; a condition openly recognised by all the Powers when they withdrew their Legations from Seoul. Among all the States of Europe Russia is most unqualified to offer any objection to that arrangement in view of the pledges given by her at Portsmouth. There is also another clause of the Treaty which demands attention. It is the clause which provides that "Russian subjects in Korea shall be treated exactly in the same manner as the subjects or citizens of other foreign Powers." In inserting such a clause into a treaty with Japan, Russia constructively recognised the latter's competence to guarantee to her most-favoured-nation treatment in Korea. Suppose that France negotiated with Great Britain an agreement securing most-favoured-nation treatment for French citizens in Egypt, could there be any doubt as to France's interpretation of England's political status on the banks of the Nile? Of course not, and equally beyond doubt is the significance of the above quoted clause in the Portsmouth Treaty. Thus we are driven to conclude that St. Petersburg's procedure in M. PLANCON's case is merely the outcome of illogical hauteur. Russia can not bear to face the practical consequences of her own engagements. This is a recrudescence of the spirit that precipitated the war, but happily the affair is too trifling to have serious results. After all, St. Petersburg would be more than human did it not try to save something out of the wreck, and the only thing to be said is that the attempt seems ill conceived and unskilful.

MR. MILLER'S CONSULAR REPORT.

In No. 2566 of the Daily Consular and Trade Reports issued by the Department of Commerce and Labor—Bureau of Manufactures—of the United States of North America we find the report sent home from Yokohama by Mr. Consul-General H. B. Miller upon the new tariff of Japan, the telegraphic summary of which caused some comment in the vernacular press. The report reads as follows:—

A comparison of the bill with the existing law reveals, first and foremost, a plan on the part of Japan to build up the country as a manufacturing power. She extends the conventional tariff to all countries by imperial ordinance. She prepares for retaliatory tariffs against countries discriminating against her vessels and products, and proposes also to prevent importations of bounty-made products of other countries. By extending the free list and modification of existing rates she encourages every form of manufacturing which is considered practicable for the Empire. Coal is to be free of duty; also ship's stores supplied to ships in open ports. Duties paid on imported materials used in the manufacture of certain articles for export (to be subsequently specified) are to be refunded.

This measure is estimated to increase the revenues several million dollars, and is designed as a temporary tariff law until the conventional tariff shall come to an end or be revived by special negotiations. One of the most commendable features of the new law is the effort to exchange specific for ad valorem duties. This is a feature especially agreeable to American merchants from several points of view, and is considered of much benefit to American goods generally. The new tariff will take the place of the general tariff and the war tax known as the extraordinary import duty, but does not interfere with the consumption tax, which remains as before.

PROPOSED CHANGES

Changes in many of the principal articles and commodities are given below, 100 sen equaling 1 yen or 49.8 cents American; 100 kin=133 pounds:

Barley raised from .40 to .45 sen per 100 kin.

Wheat raised from .536 to .57 sen per 100 kin.

In 1904 the United States exported to Japan wheat to the value of $423,171 gold in round numbers.

Oats raised from .45 to .47 sen per 100 kin.

Cotton seed raised from .135 to .20 sen per 100 kin.

Fruits and vegetables in tins, including boxing, from an ad valorem of 30 per cent. to 7.30 yen per 100 kin.

Tinned goods exported from the United States in 1901 aggregated, in round numbers, $800,851 gold.

Fruits and nuts from 30 to 45 per cent. ad valorem.

Fresh fruits from 30 per cent. ad valorem to 4 yen per 100 kin.

Dried fruits from 30 per cent. ad valorem to 8.10 yen per 100 kin.

Wheat flour is raised from 1.196 to 1.45 yen per 100 kin.

In 1904 the United States exported flour to Japan aggregating, in round numbers, $4,671,505 gold.

Oatmeal is raised from 25 per cent. ad valorem to 4.42 yen per 100 kin.

Other flour from 25 to 30 per cent. ad valorem.

INCREASE ON FLOUR EXPLAINED.

The raise in the tariff on wheat flour is one of the most important in its effect upon American trade, as this constitutes one of the large and growing imports into Japan. Seventy-two cents import duty on 133 pounds (100 kin) is a very high rate. A duty of over half a cent a pound will place this article of diet beyond the power of the masses to purchase, and must therefore reduce the consumption of American flour.

The new duty on wheat will be 57 sen per 100 kin, an advance of only 3½ sen. This will give a very comfortable advantage to the milling of wheat in Japan. Manchuria offers a satisfactory solution to the high tariff on flour. Japan has possession of Dalny, and there is no doubt but that she will establish free trade relations between the home land and this leased territory. The railway now owned by the Japanese Government, extending from Dalny north, reaches into the great wheat fields of the Singari Valley in Manchuria, and also the great wheat plains and hills of Mongolia, now in grass, but susceptible of the highest production of wheat. This same railroad passes through the entire length of the fine grain-growing valley of the Liao. It is no doubt a part of the policy of Japan to make this most productive country the source of food supply for her millions of people at home, and use her railroad and her own ships to carry it. To accomplish this, and to make the investments in mills attractive, she places a high tariff on flour from other countries and subsidizes ships. With a railway, the rates on which the Government controls, with subsidized ships for bringing the flour to Japan, and a high tariff on foreign flour, investments in the mills at Dalny or Japan will certainly be very good. And as wheat can be put on the cars of the Japanese railway for half the price it is delivered on cars in the United States, there seems to be no reason why the flour for Japan should not be drawn from the fields of Manchuria and Mongolia. Several manufacturers of flouring-mill machinery are already in Japan negotiating for a supply of machinery for mills as soon as this Government measure becomes a law.

Ham and bacon raised from 1.36 to 1.40 yen per 100 kin.

Salted fish raised from 1.42 to 2 yen per 100 kin.

Article 7, section 17, provides that fish gather-red by Japanese vessels shall be brought in free. This will exclude American ships bringing salted salmon to Japan, confines the shipping of salmon from Alaska to Japanese sailing vessels, and will operate as a discrimination against American shipping.

THE DAIRY INDUSTRY.

Condensed milk has been increased from 1.23 yen per dozen tins to 10 yen per 100 kin. This is one of the growing imports into Japan, and if prices could be maintained at a low level the importation would continue to increase. At present it is imported under the conventional tariff at a very low rate, but the heavy increase under the new tariff will, without doubt, check the importation. I am inclined to the view that this item also is raised with a purpose of encouraging production under Japanese control. There are splendid natural advantages in Japan, Korea, and Manchuria for the development of the dairy industry, and there seems to be a purpose to give this Japanese market to Japanese who will engage in the business within this territory.

COTTON GOODS.

While raw and ginned cotton remain on the free list there is a general advance in cotton yarns and cotton goods of every nature, and the new bill changes them from ad valorem to specific duties; but as cottons of almost every kind are specified in the conventional tariff this part of the law will not take effect until after 1910, the date of the expiration of the conventional tariff. The present duty on cotton drills is one and a sixteenth sen per square yard, and 10 per cent. additional ad valorem as a consumption tax. The new tariff will be 6.3 sen per square yard, and 10 per cent. consumption tax additional.

MANY INCREASES.

Butter, raised from 21 yen per 100 kin to 27 yen per 100 kin.

Margarine, raised from 11.60 yen per 100 kin to 23 yen per 100 kin.

Cheese, advanced from 12.90 yen per 100 kin to 17 yen per 100 kin.

Infants' food, advanced to 35 per cent ad valorem.

Other comestibles raised from 30 to 40 per cent ad valorem.

Sugar is generally lowered.

Molasses, reduced from 2.37 yen per 100 kin to 85 sen per 100 kin.

Confectionery goes from an ad valorem duty of 55 per cent to a specific duty of 20 yen per 100 kin.

Jam, jelly, etc., advanced from an ad valorem duty of 40 per cent to a specific duty of 13 yen per 100 kin.

Vegetables and fruits, preserved with sugar, advanced from 40 per cent ad valorem to 8 yen per 100 kin.

In wines and liquors quite a change is noted in material increases.

Sole leather, raised from 5.69 yen per 100 kin to 13.30 yen per 100 kin.

Sheep leather, advanced from 18.36 yen to 22.40 yen per 100 kin. Goat leather from an ad valorem duty of 10 per cent to a specific duty of 55 yen per 100 kin.

Crocodile leather, from an ad valorem duty of 10 per cent to a specific duty of 98.20 yen per 100 kin.

All other leather advanced from an ad valorem duty of 10 per cent to an ad valorem duty of 20 per cent.

Japan imported from the United States in 1904 sole leather to the amount of $1,780,532 gold, and "other leather" to the value of $389,309 gold.

Under the subject of metals there are several items in the proposed tariff which demand attention.

Bar and rod iron exceeding one-fourth inch in diameter, is raised to 30 per cent ad valorem. (It now enters under the conventional tariff at .261 sen per 100 kin.)

Rails, raised from .129 sen per 100 kin (under the conventional tariff) to .87 sen per 100 kin.

Inasmuch as it is probable that the Government will soon become the owner of all railroads in the Empire, the tariff on rails and all material for railways will come in practically free, or otherwise at the discretion of the Government.

Pipes and tubes raised from 10 to 20 per cent ad valorem.

Wire of all kinds, and sheet iron and sheet steel, and all kinds of manufactured iron, raised from 100 to 600 per cent.

Nails are raised materially, the new tariff raising the duty from .573 per 100 kin to 1.36 yen per 100 kin.

The raise in block and ingot copper is from 5 to 7½ per cent, and there is also a general increase in all manufactured copper.

Lead, block and ingot, raised from .316 sen to .38 sen per 100 kin.

The imports from the United States in 1904 in lead was $200,900, gold.

Mercury raised from 5.048 yen (conventional tariff) to 7.20 yen per 100 kin.

In 1904 the imports of mercury from the United States was $90,250, gold.

Tin plate raised from 10 per cent ad valorem (conventional tariff) to 20 per cent ad valorem.

The imports of tin plate from the United States in 1904 was $180,163, gold.

Tin leaf remains the same.

Zinc raised from 40 sen per 100 kin (conventional tariff) to 72 sen 100 kin.

There is a very heavy increase in the tariff on paper, but as this is also covered by the conventional tariff it will not be charged against imports of this character from the United States at present.

Bicycles advanced from 35 to 40 per cent. ad valorem, and the parts of same have a similar advance, with the exception of tires, that are changed from 35 per cent. ad valorem to 95.60 yen per 100 kin.

Sewing machines. There is an advance in this line. The old rate was an ad valorem one of 10 per cent, while the proposed duty is fixed at 11.10 yen per 100 kin for hand power and 8.25 yen per 100 kin for foot-power machines. Parts of sewing machines are raised from 10 to 20 per cent. ad valorem.

1904 the imports from the United States was $122,800 gold.

Typewriters show an advance from 10 to 20 per cent. ad valorem.

Telegraph and telephone instruments raised from 15 to 20 per cent.

Boilers are raised from 10 to 15 per cent. ad valorem.

The United States exported in 1904 this article to this value of $214,900 gold.

Engines of all kinds are raised from 10 to 15 per cent. ad valorem.

Locomotive engines and electric motors imported from the United States in 1904 reached a total value of $583,000 gold.

Electric-light lamps, not exceeding 100 candle-power, are rated in the proposed tariff at 5.80 yen per 100. All others at 10.20 yen per 100.

This will provide a good protection to the new Japanese industry.

Machinery for metal and wood working, raised from 10 to 15 per cent ad valorem.

Scales and balances remain the same at 20 per cent ad valorem.

Watches formerly paid a duty of 25 and 30 per cent ad valorem. The proposed tariff raises them to 40 and 50 per cent.

This increase, with many others of a similar character, is almost certain to work much injury to the American trade, as it will put high class goods out of the reach of a great majority of purchasers and compel them to buy the cheaper European articles. Farmers' and mechanic's tools are changed from 10 per cent ad valorem to a much heavier rate of specific duty, ranging from 2.35 yen to 10.90 yen per 100 kin on some things and a 20 per cent ad valorem on others.

Spinning, weaving, and other machines, and parts thereof, remain at 15 per cent ad valorem.

Cotton underwear is raised from the already heavy rate of 3 yen per dozen to 4 yen per dozen, and all other kinds of underwear at about the same proportion. This is evidently based upon the idea of protecting the home industry.

Petroleum (illuminating oil) remains the same .096 sen per gallon.

Oregon pine, raised from 5 per cent ad valorem to 0.60 sen per 100 square feet, 1 inch thick.

Cheap metal jewelry, raised from 10 to 60 per cent ad valorem. Much of this class of merchandise heretofore came from the United States.

Phonographs are advanced from 33 to 50 per cent ad valorem. The American trade in these machines has developed quite extensively.

THE PROTECTIVE POLICY.

The most important problem of Japan's future lies in the development of her fiscal system. Her growth along commercial and industrial lines, as is evidenced by the proposed new tariff, indicates the question is demanding the serious consideration of her statesmen. Japan has entered upon a protective policy, following the United States, and is shaping her course accordingly. She is preparing herself to meet the requirements of the oriental market and at the same time protecting her industries. Protection is the watchword of the Japanese, and in every line of commerce and industrial expansion the dominant idea of the Government and the people is to assist in every practical way the development of infant industries and the protection of the old ones.

By way of illustration, take a few of the articles which are materially affected by the proposed tariff for consideration in connection with the idea of protection. Paraffin is entered free. This is to foster the manufacture of candles and matches for the China trade. On the other hand, candles are advanced in duty. Alcohol is raised to a prohibitory rate, while molasses, with which the Japanese manufacture alcohol, is materially reduced. Leather is also materially advanced in order to protect the new industry of manufacturing, which promises much for Japan in the near future. Cotton goods are raised materially in order to protect the rapidly increasing spinning industry. These are but a few of the examples which tend to prove the protective policy of the Japanese. To this list might well be added the material advance in all kinds of comestibles used by foreigners in Japan, which will raise the cost of living to a considerable amount.

While Japan is admitting free the raw material in many cases, her scientists are daily experimenting with a view to produce this raw material. The fields of experimentation will be Korea and the leased territory of Manchuria, with such parts of China as are accessible. If these new fields can be made to produce, Japan with her superior merchant marine and other facilities will see to it that she offers the best market for the raw material. Japan has well-defined plans in this respect, and hopes by their solution not only to make herself independent, but to control the commercial destinies of Asia.

THE FAMINE.

As far as foreigners are concerned the famine may be said to be over. Again this year wheat in the famine region is only half a crop, and will possibly be even less. A heavy frost on the last day of April followed by two others in May wrought havoc with the mulberry leaves so that the silk crop will be several million yen below the average. Even though there be a good rice crop this fall there will still be much suffering next winter.

Foreigners have however shown abundant sympathy and their generous gifts have relieved much suffering and been highly appreciated. Much of the money from foreign lands reached the famine area at a late date but is now being put to good use by the officials.

The Foreign Committee of Relief held its final meeting last week and arranged for the distribution of the balance on hand and it is expected that in a few days our treasury will be empty. At an early date a report will be rendered.

At the final meeting a resolution was passed that any additional funds received should be divided equally between the Sendai and Okayama Orphanages. These two worthy institutions have taken in a large number of children from the famine districts and any money contributed on account of the famine and sent though us will be handed to them and well used by them for real famine relief.

MONTHLY SUMMARY OF JAPANESE CURRENT LITERATURE.

There are a few writers who maintain that Mr. Makino's appointment as Minister of Education will lead to long desired changes in the school system followed in this country. It is said that Marquis Saionji is prepared to support the new Minister in a more hearty manner than any Minister has been hitherto backed. It is reported that Mr. Sawayanagi, who went to England a few months ago, has been recalled and on his return will be made Vice-Minister of Education. The Kyōikukai writes hopefully of the educational situation. It says that the chief reason for the unimportant nature of the chair of Education in past years has been chiefly owing to the fact that the Minister of Education has always had little to do with the preparation of the Budget. There is, says the Kyōikukai, no valid reason why this should be so, as the money annually spent on education is very considerable. The office of Minister of Education has long been rightly spoken of as a mere sinecure, (俸食), haushoku. The real cause of this is the fact that most of the money spent on local education comes from local taxes and the people who pay these taxes are controlled by the Home Minister. So that with him lies the power of controlling provincial primary and middle school education. Education in this country is seldom discussed as a national question by our two Houses. Local autonomy in educational matters has worked badly in Japan, says the Kyōikukai, and what is wanted is the centralization of educational power and improved state administration. The Kyōikukai in this matter does not endorse the widespread sentiment that it is undesirable to increase the power of the Department of Education, because it cannot be trusted to use its authority discreetly. It holds that with the appointment of Mr. Makino all grounds for mistrust have been removed and that the country will do well to insist on such a readjustment of the distribution of power as will raise the Minister of Education to the rank of the other Ministers of State. Passing on to discuss Mr. Makino's views on education, the Kyōikukai, relying on what appeared in the Yomiuri Shimbun on April 9th on that subject, says that Mr. Makino's long residence in other countries to a certain extent no doubt prevents his understanding the precise state of affairs in the Japanese educational world. It is alleged that Mr. Makino is in favour of making the teaching of English, German and French universal. This the Kyōikukai thinks to be both impracticable and unnecessary. The new Minister is also said to be in favour of extending the period for compulsory attendance at primary schools, and for the purpose of finding out what is the general view on this subject proposes to convene a meeting of representatives of primary schools. This latter step the Kyōikukai deems superfluous as the teachers at these schools are known to be in favour of a six year period for reasons that have been repeatedly stated during Mr. Makino's absence from the country. The Kyōikukai calls attention to the fact that the Government regulation requiring all candidates for the offices of judge and procurator to pass an examination in a European language, which originally was to have been put in force this year, has been temporarily withdrawn, on the ground that it is as yet too early to carry out such a measure. The expectation that the regulation would be carried out gave a great impetus to the study of foreign languages in Tōkyō and elsewhere for a while, especially in the great law schools. The Kyōikukai is of opinion that the curriculum of these schools should anyhow be made to include the study of foreign languages and other subjects. It does not regard the law student as he exists to-day as a serviceable type of Japanese young man. He is dissipated, disputatious and often very narrow-minded. He needs a different sort of training to that which he receives, says the Kyōikukai.

In our last Summary we epitomized from the Taiyō the first part of Professor Takebe's article on the foreign policy Japan should adopt during the next 10 years. Retaining the headings of the original, we now give the substance of the concluding portion of the essay.

(6) A Sound Foreign Policy.—It has always seemed to me in reflecting on the various kinds of foreign policy followed in the world that there are three alleged objects of foreign policy which are distinctly one-sided and which cannot be safely followed to-day. (1) There is the policy that places national renown above all other considerations. For the sake of getting a good name among the world's great Powers there are countries that will sacrifice almost anything. Such countries are worshippers of a certain kind of fame. (2) There is foreign policy that is purely selfish, that is bent on pushing the interests of one country against those of all others by all conceivable means, lawful and unlawful, in disregard of the maxims of such international morality as exists to-day. Those who follow this policy know not what shame is and hold reputation for integrity and fair-mindedness in supreme contempt. (3) There is the policy that has the vindication of right, the promotion of virtue and the suppression of evil as its main objects. According to this policy nothing that is contrary to humanity should be supported. It goes without saying that war is condemned by this policy. During the reign of the Sung Princes* China followed this policy, cultivating the arts of peace and reaching a high state of refinement, but only to find that to neglect to prepare for war is to court destruction. According to this theory, which is essentially religious, evil must not be suppressed by physical force, the cheek must be turned to the smiter. Now it is quite evident that no country to-day that wishes to maintain its independence and to avoid endless political complications of a dangerous kind can follow exclusively either one of the three above named policies. To talk of carrying out the law of right in dealings with other countries, fine as it sounds, ignores the fact that right and wrong go for little in the dealings of one State with another (Michi to iu koto wa konnichi no kokusai hatten no jōtai ni oite, hotondo iu ni tarazaru biryoku naru mono to iwanakereba naranu) and each State has its own notion as to what is right and wrong. But the self-aggrandizement policy proves to be equally impracticable. No State is bold enough to espouse this policy openly and unreservedly. And as for following the national renown principle, it would soon end in the loss of real prestige. If asked to determine which of the three policies wield most power in the council chambers of the great Powers to-day we reply the self-interest policy, undoubtedly. There are countries that make it quite plain that their country's permanent interests and nothing else guides their foreign policy. There are others who prefer to give to their pushing of their own interests a moral air, to touch up their egoism with a few quasi-altruistic strokes of the brush; but the real truth is that self-interest and nothing else is the chief consideration with all States. Considering then the state of the diplomatic world to-day, was not our action at the Portsmouth Conference a very singular departure from the canons of common-sense? There are those who speak of it as a triumph of humanitarianism—yea, as a religious triumph. There are those of us who find it hard to suppress a bitter smile when a signal diplomatic failure is described in terms that make it resemble a grand victory. Our policy at the Portsmouth Conference, if analysed, would be found to contain 70 per cent. of the love of renown sentiment and 30 per cent. of high moral sentiment. It has in this country been dubbed with the name of the "High Collar Policy."† No sound-minded politician

* The reference here is to the most ancient of the 3 dynasties of Sung rulers mentioned in Chinese history. What was known as the Sung State was founded about 1113 B.C. and conquered by Tsi, 285 B.C. It occupied the lower part of the valley of the Hwai River. It gave its name to the two subsequent Sung dynasties.—(WRITER OF SUMMARY.)

† It will not be very long before a whole page of a dictionary will be required for definitions with examples of the various uses to which this term "High Collar" is put in this country. It is met with everywhere—in literature, in schools, in social life and in politics. It is applied to people who put on airs, can possibly regard it with satisfaction. It is well that we should realize the fact that the actual basis of the foreign policies of all the great Powers to-day is nothing but self-interest, notwithstanding the fact that certain countries deem it expedient to dress up the self-interest policy in garments to which the name of civilisation or virtue is applied. During the next ten years the situation will not change and hence no such chivalric policy as Japan adopted at Portsmouth can be followed with safety to the empire.

(7) The Reduction of Expenditure.—It seems to me that the situation is now such as to demand the husbanding of our financial resources as much as possible. The rage for foreign loans I regard with apprehension. I know that there are some who argue that the desire to borrow shows that the nation has self-confidence, that it indicates certain commercial and industrial potentialities; that increased development is the object in view in introducing foreign capital, and so on. But I am afraid of the speculative element that is apt to attend the floating of big loans. It seems to me that the thing is being overdone and that there is an attempt in some quarters to make Japan appear a bigger country financially than she actually is. There are persons who think that the Government is taking too many things in hand and that the pace at which great undertakings are being pushed ahead is somewhat dangerous. But I am not in favour of carrying retrenchment to the extent of crippling the industries that have already been started or of preventing the establishment of new paying concerns.

(8) Material and Mental Development must keep pace with each other.—Under this heading Dr. Takebe dwells on the importance of Japan's propagating religion in the neighbouring countries and of her developing it in the home land. Japan has gained a reputation in the world for high class ethics and for refinement of life. That she must maintain at all costs. If a country that is so clever in diplomacy as Russia finds it necessary to figure before the world as an advocate of peace, as the champion of the Christian Gospel, Japan cannot even as a matter of diplomacy afford to neglect religion.

(9) Society must take a broad view of the country's future political programme.—Society as a whole knows little of diplomacy and finds it hard to understand the nature of the position this country aspires to occupy. Very few of us look beyond our own little world. In this country the State and society by no means always go hand in hand and society often needs educating up to the standard of action which the State aims at reaching. A great national policy can only be carried out when the State is backed by society generally. There are some who fancy that socialistic doctrines are going to work wonders in the reform of society, but it is difficult to see how the principles of socialism bearing on the redistribution of property can be carried out without involving law-breaking and injustice.

(10) Conclusion.—After a careful survey of the situation in the Far East I have come to the conclusion that during the next ten years Japan will have a difficult part to play and that she can only hold her own by extreme circumspection and by a skilful use of the diplomatic methods which are used by her rivals. To foresee what precisely will be the course of events in China is impossible, but there are certain preparations for contingencies that we can make and to these I have drawn attention in the foregoing article.

"Japanese Commerce as Europe sees it" is the title of an article published in the June Taiyō, written by Baron Suematsu. We reproduce below in as short a form as possible the principal parts of the essay. Though it is true that the volume of business transacted by the nation grows an-who aspire to occupy higher rank than ordinary folks, to lead a new fashion. Conceit and vanity are very frequently but not invariably implied by the term. In the text the meaning is that Japan was setting a new fashion to the diplomatic world. She cut a new figure in political life. But much satire must be read into Dr. Takebe's sentences; for he is one of those who regard the Portsmouth negotiations as a big fiasco as far as Japan is concerned.—(WRITER OF SUMMARY.)

nually and though Japan, comparing her revenue now with what it was 20 years ago, may fairly be astonished at her own progress, yet it is important to bear in mind how far behind the great Western Powers we still are in the matter of business and how very small to them some of our locally named "big" things look. As we have now entered the field of business competition it is important that we should realize our weakness and defects; that we should fix our attention upon the points in which we are a long way behind the most forward Western nations. Now, to begin with Japanese bonds, while in Paris my attention was drawn by a French economist to a serious drawback to the sale of these bonds which has its origin in the comparatively small way in which we Japanese do business. What my French friend said was this. It is one of the canons of business that the bigger the purchase the cheaper the rate ought to be. But with Japanese stock the reverse is the case. If a Japanese bank is applied to for say 30,000 or 40,000 yen worth of stock it will manage to transfer it at a reasonable rate; but if the order runs into 200,000 yen or 300,000 yen, it has to go to the Stock Exchange and make extensive purchases, resulting in an immediate rise in the price of the bonds required, which upsets all the calculations of the would-be purchaser. In Paris, London, and New York there are banks that can negotiate big transactions in stocks without seriously disturbing the money-market. But our banks have not attained to this standard. Some Europeans say we are worshippers of the sword and hint that in business we are far behind the Western world. To a certain extent this is true and we have got to set about finding a remedy for our backwardness. Now to come to another point, while perpetually recounting the particulars in which we have benefited ourselves by learning from the West, we overlook the fact that Europe has for many years past been learning from us and has reached the point of rivalling us in what we have been wont to consider our own specialties. This is the "Land of Chrysanthemums*," and fifteen or twenty years ago no such specimens of the beautiful flower as exist here in abundance were to be found in Europe, or America, but during my recent visit I saw in various parts of Europe magnificent specimens of our favourite flower. On its cultivation and development Europeans bring much scientific knowledge to bear; so they have produced corollae of a size that it would be hard to match here. Then there are business houses in Europe which make a specialty of the reproduction by machinery of articles that are hand-made here. Germany has figured more prominently than any country in the manufacture of imitations of Chinese and Japanese articles. These things are produced at a cheap rate and, though somewhat inferior to hand-made things, command a large sale. In some cases the imitation is so good that tourists have been heard to say when travelling in Japan that except as mementoes of their visit it is now unnecessary to purchase Japanese curios here. A lady remarked to me in Nagasaki in reference to the tortoise-shell articles sold there that precisely the same things could be bought cheaper in Europe. It seems to me that it is high time that we gave up the vain attempt to set off our hand-made things against machine-made things. The old argument against machinery, that it throws skilled artisans out of work by furnishing rapidly and inexpensively a big supply of articles, has been brought forward here. But the law of progress involves some sacrifices and individual losses. We can't afford to stand apart from our competitors for any such reason as that given above. One great drawback connected with our failure to introduce machinery for the manufacture of articles that are produced by the myriad in Europe is the fact that we can never execute any big order quick enough to satisfy our customers. Of course it is true to say that the machine can never take the place of the human hand in certain works of art. It is the medium and inferior articles that as a rule are multiplied by the thousand by big machines. But the sale of the highly finished hand-made articles is small compared to that commanded by somewhat roughly made things. Another disadvantage of hand-made things as regarded by Europeans is the difficulty of getting a large number of articles made in precisely the same way. Our Japanese artisans are rather averse to being employed in the mechanical multiplication of the same shaped articles. Two things were a great surprise to me in Europe; one being the way in which the French people are able to save money and the other the marvellous industrial activity of Germany. A thickly populated country, Germany can only succeed in maintaining her millions by increased activity in industry. The Germans still emigrate to America in large numbers, and wherever they go they carry with them great aptitude for industrial pursuits. Their ships are getting to be the best in the world. Constant complaints have been made in the English House of Commons because so many British officials travel by German ships. But the invariable reply is that they are free to travel as they please and they naturally wish to get the best value for the money paid out. The Germans do everything possible for the comfort and amusement of the passengers on board in a way that neither the French nor the English approach at present. Baron Suematsu in the middle of his article branches off to a number of miscellaneous subjects, including the position of woman in America especially, where he thinks she controls and runs everybody, beginning with husband or father as the case may be. In considering the intercourse between Japan and America, this woman-worship on the part of Americans cannot be left out of account. Japanese have no sympathy with it. The Baron then goes on to speak thus. Here is what certain publicists and financial magnates in France said to me. We have any quantity of surplus capital in this country; so much that we do not know how to invest it. Consequently we are in a position to lend your Government any amount of money they may require. But what we look for from you is that you should dissipate by your action the notion that you are a people with a large amount of military ambition and that you even cast sinister eyes on Annam and Tongking. You have nothing to fear from Europe. Even an army of a million men would hardly suffice to take your country. Since then we in Europe have no designs against your dominions, you must convince us that you will not interfere with ours. If France and Japan get to trust each other they can benefit each other in a hundred ways. Together the two nations must sail in the ship of civilisation. My experience of Europeans, continues Baron Suematsu, leads me to think that those of them who have only read about Japan and who have met the Japanese who have gone abroad are more fair-minded than those who have resided long in the East, many of whom are strongly tinged with the anti-Japanese spirit of days gone by. This remark applies to diplomats as well as to private individuals. The members of Legations who have passed some years in this country are not so liberal-minded in dealing with Japan as members of European Legations belonging to the same nationalities. . . . Among the things which I found it hard to defend, our commercial morality deserves special notice. It seems to be the general opinion in Europe that our business men are not so reliable as the Chinese. I am afraid that this is to a certain extent true. I said what I could in favour of the Japanese merchant and pointed out that in feudal times among a certain class of business men there was a high code of honour. But I felt all the time that there was some truth in what is alleged against some of our business men. But the Japanese tradesmen at the open ports in the early days of the Meiji era are responsible for the bad name our merchants have received. They were mostly a class of unscrupulous speculators bent on taking advantage of the ignorance of foreigners as far as possible. When the samurai, some four million in number, gave up their emoluments to the State, they found it very hard to make a living and so they started all sorts of unsound concerns involving themselves in loss and implicating certain foreigners in the open ports. They had no knowledge of business and so the term samurai-commerce (shizoku-shōhō) became a term of reproach. But as regards failure to execute large orders, it was oftener inability than dishonesty that caused that. Japanese business men were unaccustomed to receive large orders and were not prepared to carry them out.

An article from the pen of Baron Kaneko urging the development of mechanical industry in Japan appears in the June Taiyō. This article as well as that of Baron Suematsu, is a reproduction of an address delivered before an Association connected with the Keizai Shimpō. Baron Kaneko has much to say about the rapid growth of industry in America. In reference to American wealth he observes that up to 7 years ago to a large extent America had been living on money borrowed from Europe. After she returned most of the money borrowed, she went ahead at an astonishing rate and during the late war showed her ability to lend to another country. Her portion of our first loan was covered 5 times over, that of the second, owing to an unfavourable state of the money market, twice over, and that of the third loan 7 times over. This was the first time that America had subscribed largely to a foreign loan, says Baron Kaneko. The Baron then proceeds to demonstrate that unless Japan is prepared to expend large sums of money on the starting of new factories of all sorts and the purchase of mechanical appliances she will be soon left behind and will see China and Korea supplied with material of diverse kinds by countries like America that can execute big orders in a few days. We have no space to give the details supplied by the Baron, but this is the gist of his article.

Mr. J. Megata writes in the Taiyō on the starting of industries in Korea and the need there is of great care in advancing capital for such industries owing to the lack of experience in dealing with big enterprises among the Koreans and of their love of speculation. The Japanese Government is doing all it can to control things, but the trouble is that the Korean Government has no fixed policy in the matter and is liable to be corrupted by interested persons. There is nothing more urgent than the control of the employment of capital in Korea, says Mr. Megata. If this be not done useless industries will be started and capital will be squandered to no purpose.*

Mr. K. Mochizuki, a member of the Diet, contributes to the Taiyō an article entitled Nissin Dōkwaron (日清同化論) "The Mutual Incorporation of China and Japan." Mr. Mochizuki regards the present state of China as quite alarming. He thinks that since the war things have been going from bad to worse. Anti-foreign feeling is spreading everywhere. Nobody knows this better than the missionaries. In Southern China at a conference of missionaries it was decided that the question of providing themselves with arms for self-protection was one that demanded serious consideration. In Mr. Mochizuki's conception China's peril is to a large extent Japan's peril. The partition of China and her control by rival Western Powers would be a source of great trouble if not danger to this country. There is only one remedy for the present situation and that is the identification of the interests of the two countries, their thorough amalgamation. Some will exclaim, observes Mr. Mochizuki, that such a consummation would be a verification of European predictions about the "yellow peril." "Not at all," replies Mr. Mochizuki. "On the contrary it would remove all grounds for alarm, as China's attitude to the West would become what ours is at the present moment." That our Government is desirous of bringing the two countries into closer relations with each other is rendered plain by the declaration on post-bellum foreign policy made by Marquis Saionji some months ago. The Marquis then said that the increase of cordiality between the two countries and their proceeding hand in hand along the path of civilisation was something which must be striven for earnestly. Mr. Mochizuki next proceeds to give a sketch of the dangerous state in which China now is, of the feebleness of the central Government and of the consequent danger of the establishment of a number of independent States within the geographical limits of the country. That Western countries would utilize such a situation for pushing their own interests goes without saying. For the next ten years England and Japan have agreed to prevent, by resort to arms if necessary, such an issue. But under certain conceivable contingencies could they carry out this policy? With the whole Chinese empire divided against itself and with rival Western Powers helping one province to oppose another, the task of restoring to the central government even the authority it wields to-day might easily prove too gigantic a task for the two countries to perform, as the help England would give would depend on the absence of other more imperious demands on her military resources. If Japan were to take China in hand now before things have gone too far, she might render her impregnable against her many foes. Her potentialities for successful resistance are enormous. They only need to be turned into realities by the guidance that it would be easy for us to give.

In the latter part of his article Mr. Mochizuki brings forward a large amount of evidence to show how different are the fundamental notions and even the moral ideals of the modern Chinese from the modern Japanese. Public spirit there is next to none in China. The life lived by the majority of the Chinese may be described as for the most part an essentially animal life. The relation of the sexes as far as the teeming millions that inhabit the cities of China go is that of the brute creation.* Notwithstanding the veneration with which the Confucian teaching is regarded, the virtues taught by China's sages are only honoured in the breach by the mass of the Chinese people, who may be described as to a large extent lacking in benevolence, integrity, loyalty, sincerity, filial piety, brotherly feeling, politeness, discernment of good and evil (sunawachi fujin fujō, fuchū, fushin (徳), fukō, futei, furei, fuchi (智) ni ochi-iri). But notwithstanding all this, Mr. Mochizuki is sanguine enough to think that Japan and China can amalgamate. He admits that the Chinese have no public spirit, that they have no patriotism, that they have not begun seriously to take steps for self-defence. Yet he thinks that Japan can so transform them as to make them quite a new nation.

A few weeks ago the Jiji Shimpō commenced publishing Sunday supplements. The title of Bungei Shūhō was given to them. They treat of various light subjects such as women's costume and head-gear. To the first number Mrs. Shimoda Utako contributes an article advocating strongly the use of hats by Japanese women and referring to the old Japanese custom of wearing ichime-gasa. These head coverings, she says, came into fashion at the end of the Nara period and continued to be followed down to the beginning of the Tokugawa age.

No Japanese scholar's untimely death has been so lamented by literary men as that of Dr. Takayama. Yearly memorial meetings are held throughout the country and everything that he wrote is gradually being included in an edition of his works that is now coming out at the Hakubunkan.

The following books are announced. "The Future of Education" by Baron Kaneko published by the Kōdōkwan. This work gives the conclusions reached by the Baron after a study of America for about a year.

"Principles and Methods in dealing with backward pupils in Elementary Schools," published by the above firm. "Ideal Commerce" by Mr.

M. Takashima. "Longevity," by Mr. Ito Shinichirō; "The Study of Nature on the 53 Sundays of the year." This, according to a notice published in Dr. Inoue's magazine Tō-A no Hikari, is a charmingly written book. The information given is all scientific, but the subjects are treated in a most entertaining manner so that the book makes delightful reading. Mr. K. Kimura is the author and the Fuzambō are the publishers.

In an article 16 pages in length published in his new magazine, "The Light of the Far East" Dr. Inoue Tetsujirō compares the individualism of the West with the family system in Japan. He thinks that the position which the family occupies in the Japanese mind differentiates him from Europeans and Americans to such an extent that the words "East is East and West is West" are true to facts. Dr. Inoue is in many respects a very conservative thinker, an ardent defender of Japanese views as against those held by Western writers. To Dr. Inoue it appears that Japanese ancestor worship, veneration for elders and strong family ties yield better moral fruits than our western independence and love of liberty. He admits, however, towards the close of his article that Japan may profitably introduce a limited amount of our individualism and independence. He grants that in numerous particulars where individual capacity, originality and resource are required for the successful management of enterprises the Occidental possesses many qualities which are lacking in the normal Oriental. Though the family organization has succeeded so well in Japan as a basis of national strength and consolidation, for other kinds of organizations the Japanese have not shown great aptitude, Dr. Inoue says. In this as in many other things Dr. Inoue preaches the doctrine of harmony. The blending of Eastern and Western thought is a course which Dr. Inoue never wearies of urging on his fellow-countrymen. But there are of course degrees beyond which this cannot possibly go.

JAPAN SOCIETY OF LONDON.

ANNUAL DINNER IN TOKYO.

The annual Japan Society dinner was held on Tuesday, June 12th, in the Imperial Hotel, Tokyo. For the first time in the history of the local branch ladies were present, the fair sex being well represented and adding a welcome touch of colour and variety by their presence and society. The hall, with the exception of a pair of crossed flags emblematic of the union between England and Japan, was not decorated, its ornate fittings rendering this an unnecessary process. His Excellency Sir Claude Maxwell MacDonald, G.C.M.G., K.C.B., G.C.V.O., British Ambassador, was in the chair and was supported by Viscount and Viscountess Hayashi, Baron Komura, Lady MacDonald, Baron Kikuchi, Mr. T. Kato, Admiral Miyabara, Mrs. Miyabara, Prof. Hozumi, Mr. and Mrs. S. Chinda, Mr. G. Hayashi, Mr. M. Sato, Mr. M. Inagaki, Mr. K. Uchida, Count Yanagisawa, and other distinguished personages. Among others present were:—Count H. Tsugaru, Mrs. Calthrop, Capt. Calthrop, Miss Calthrop, Mrs. Sonoda, Mr. K. Sonoda, Miss Sonoda, Mr. T. Soyeda, Mr. S. Hayakawa, Mrs. Cook, Mr. S. Okoshi, Mrs. Goh, Mr. W. H. Cook, Mr. E. Schweder, Mr. J. H. Hamilton, Mrs. H. Pollak, Mr. Davies, Mr. D. Go, Count Hirose, Dr. Gomes, Prof. J. Conder, Mr. F. W. Hammond, Mrs. F. A. Kirby, Miss Kirby, Mr. Y. Duer, Miss Theodora Yeend Duer, Mr. A. G. M. Weale, Mr. H. Bekki, Mr. R. Johnson, Mr. C. G. Hannan, Mrs. Davies, Mr. H. Pollak, Mrs. Birnie, Mr. C. M. Birnie, Mr. J. K. Jones, Mr. R. Colver, Mrs. Sale, Mr. C. Sale, Mrs. Beart, Mr. M. Beart, Major Somerville, Capt. P. W. North, Mr. Brindley, Mr. J. C. Ward, Mr. C. S. Schultz, Mr. H. T. Rice, Mrs. A. F. White, Mr. A. F. White, Mrs. W. F. Mitchell, Mr. W. F. Mitchell, Mr. K. Okura, Mrs. K. Okura, Dr. Wursch, Capt. Brinkley, Dr. Rutherford Harris, Mr. J. F. Nonweiler, etc.

An excellent dinner was well served by the Imperial Hotel, a band playing selections the while. Towards the close

The CHAIRMAN said:

YOUR EXCELLENCIES, LADIES AND GENTLEMEN:—It is my privilege this evening to propose the first toast—it is one which I am sure all here will receive with the utmost enthusiasm, but not only that it is one which is always received with the most sincere respect wherever uprightness, humanity, and good government are honoured and prized. I call upon you all to give Banzai for H. I. M. the Emperor of Japan.

The toast was received with cheers and the national anthem was played.

Baron KOMURA said he had the honour to propose a toast which he was sure would be received with enthusiasm—the toast of a Sovereign who was well-beloved by his people and whose efforts in the cause of peace had won the respect and admiration of the whole world. (Applause). He gave the toast of the King of England.

This also was enthusiastically honoured and the band played "God Save the King."

Baron KIKUCHI proposed the next toast. He said: It gives me great pleasure to propose the next toast on the list, that of the Japan Society. I remember, and many here may remember, that once before I had occasion to remark on the excellence of the Society's objects, to encourage the study of the Japanese language, literature, and history, the sciences, arts and industries, the social life, and the economic conditions of the Japanese people. I also congratulated the society on the excellent work it had done in being largely instrumental in bringing about the understanding that led to the Alliance. Since then great things have happened, the attention of the world has been drawn to Japan, a number of books, pamphlets, articles, etc., on the subject have been issued, some good, some bad, some indifferent. That being the case it may be suggested by some that the raison d'être of the Society has ceased to exist and that the members may now sit down. In my opinion, however, the society has on the contrary entered on a new phase and acquired increased importance. We are a parvenu in the society of nations, and a parvenu is always regarded with jealousy and distrust. The fierce light of criticism will be thrown upon us, but I hope we shall bear any criticism, even hostile criticism, provided it is based on truth (Applause). Mistakes may very often occur and misunderstandings may arise not only between lovers and friends but also between married couples and nations (Laughter and applause). In this then lies the growing importance of a society like this and I am glad to be informed that the Society has never been more active than during the last season, that the membership has largely increased; that interesting subjects have been discussed before the Society by those having first-hand knowledge of this country, and that it was largely successful in raising a fund for the relief of the famine sufferers. As I say there is plenty for the society to do and I trust it will continue to do even more good work in the future than it has done in the past. (Applause).

The toast was cordially drunk.

Captain BRINKLEY said:—

YOUR EXCELLENCIES, LADIES AND GENTLEMEN:—Before returning thanks on behalf of the Society, I am sure you will agree that a strong expression of gratitude should be offered to two gentlemen present this evening, Mr. Ogawa and Mr. Go. To Mr. Ogawa is due the inception of these Tokyo banquets. He took upon himself and discharged most ably all the onerous duties inseparable from the organization of such functions, and it may be truly said that without Mr. Ogawa these banquets had never come into existence. As for Mr. Go, all that have followed the records of the Society with any attention, know that his name has been associated with every step of its progress and that he has shown in furthering its interests a degree of zeal and assiduity which are quite beyond praise. I do not think it is too much to say that to no man now alive does the Society owe more than to Mr. Go, unless perhaps it be to Mr. Arthur Diosy, Viscount Hayashi and Mr. Kato Takaaki. (Applause). Some four or five years ago when the idea of these Tokyo celebrations was mooted, it was with difficulty that a score or a score and a half of supporters could be found, and now, this evening, we sit down, as you see, more than 120 strong. This record illustrates the rapidity with which all good things grow in modern Japan, and may I not add that the brilliant and animated scene we witness here this evening illustrates the life to which Japan has been introduced by her contact with the West; a strenuous life with a great deal of toil and turmoil but also a great deal of dining and wining (laughter); a life with a great deal of fighting but also a great deal of triumphing, so far at least as Japan is concerned. (Applause.) I am often asked whether during my somewhat protracted sojourn in Japan I have not been profoundly astonished by the vicissitudes in the career of this country. I can not answer unequivocally in the affirmative. For, looking back down a vista of years now so numerous that it has ceased to be a pleasure to count them, I recognise that I always had a rooted faith in Japan's ability: I always believed her capable of great achievements if only the opportunity offered. Europe and Asia, not entirely of their own sweet will perhaps, have furnished the opportunity, and Japan has utilized it in a manner which does her much credit, but which does not so greatly astonish us who have watched her closely and who look for even greater achievements from her in the future. (Cheers.) Another factor which, I think, tends to render these incidents less salient in the eyes of persons living in Japan is that the Japanese themselves have not changed. We have seen them in the hour of storm and stress, and we have never observed any departure from their habitually calm, smiling and imperturbable demeanour, and we have seen them when they had drunk deeply of the cup of victory, yet we have not detected any sign of intoxication or any change in that perennial mien of placid unobtrusiveness. (Applause.) To be self-possessed in the hour of trial and self-effacing in the hour of triumph—these are fine traits of character, and so long as Japan continues to wed the virtues and graces of her own old civilization to the appliances and facilities of the new, she will have a union which can not fail to make a great mark in the history of the world. (Applause.) Our Society is a type of that union in a certain sense. It is also and more directly the type of another union which makes for the peace of the world. And in thanking Baron Kikuchi for the very gracious words he used in proposing the health of the Society as well as for the very elaborate character he has given it, and in thanking your Excellencies, Ladies and Gentlemen for the very cordial manner in which you have received the toast, I may be permitted to say that we are proud of the Society, for we regard it as a small but strong link in the chain of international amity. (Loud Applause.)

The next toast was proposed from the Chair. Sir CLAUDE MACDONALD said:

YOUR EXCELLENCIES, LADIES AND GENTLEMEN, the next toast on the list is that of the guests. It is one which I am sure all here to-night will honour with as much enthusiasm as it gives me pleasure to propose it, for our guests to-night are Viscount and Viscountess Hayashi and Baron Komura. Both the gentlemen I have named are old and valued friends of mine; I will therefore be merciful with them and say what I have to say very briefly. In a part of the world where age is, and very rightly, more than usually revered and respected, it is only meet and proper that I should take the elder victim first. I will therefore commence with Viscount Hayashi. The public services of Viscount Hayashi are too well known for me to set them forth here in detail; suffice it to say that in his earlier days Viscount Hayashi fought and suffered bravely for what he thought was the right. These strenuous days over he entered diplomacy and represented his country in Peking, St. Petersburg and London. I see on consulting a useful little compilation, a sort of Japanese "Who's Who"—published by—but no, that would be altogether too inexpensive an advertisement—I see that according to my little book Viscount Hayashi carried out the duties of his post in London "with credit." I am sure it will be a comfort to His Excellency to know this! But gentlemen—a very great deal lies behind these two little words "with credit." I will not dwell upon the great political services which Viscount Hayashi has rendered to his country whilst serving as its Representative in London, but he has by his kindness, his willingness to do the least service in the cause of charity or any other good cause, his close study of and sympathy with British life and British character, won the hearts of all my countrymen and I am sure the Viscountess will bear with me when I say all my countrywomen. He has thus assisted most nobly in bringing the two nations into close sympathy—an inestimable service to the two nations concerned, and indeed to the whole civilized world. And now for the younger victim, Baron Komura. Baron Komura, as you all know, is a graduate, and a very distinguished one, of the great University of Harvard. Commencing in the Department of Justice, a symbol of his future career, he soon joined the profession of diplomacy which I think His Excellency will allow has kept him pretty busy. As Chargé d'Affaires in Peking on the eve of the Japan-China War, as Civil Administrator in Antung, as Minister at Seoul,

Washington, and St. Petersburg, and in the international Conference at Peking of 1901, he has always upheld his country's interests in the most brilliant manner. But he will ever be remembered by civilization and humanity as the maker of Peace. Gentlemen, I am treading on delicate ground, but in this connection I think I know what the verdict of posterity will be, not only the posterity of the world but his own countrymen—(applause)—but one thing I do know, that is that when His Excellency takes up his post as Ambassador in London which he is shortly about to do, there is nothing which will appeal to my countrymen more, nothing which will ensure him a warmer welcome, than his noble work at Portsmouth. And last, but by no means least, one word for the graceful and gracious lady who has honoured the Japan Society to-night and who in London has helped to make her husband's Mission such a great success—I call upon all my countrymen to give three rousing cheers for Viscount and Viscountess Hayashi and Baron Komura. (Loud Cheers.)

VISCOUNT HAYASHI in replying to the toast on behalf of the Viscountess and himself protested against being considered the elder of Baron Komura and said he thought the latter should have been called on to reply to the toast. His Excellency the Chairman had referred to the Speaker's work in London and had spoken of him as serving his country with credit. But he had really acted under the instructions of Baron Komura—which was another reason why the latter should be called on to respond. Baron Kikuchi had referred to the past and he would claim the same privilege and say that he remembered when he was in the office of Count Mutsu, 15 years ago, it was reported by Viscount Kawase that the Japan Society had been formed in England. Count Mutsu who was ill was much pleased by this news and requested him (the speaker) to go to the Palace and report it to the Emperor, who was pleased to hear it. The Society was a small thing in those days, but during the last six years that he had the honour to occupy the office of President the number of members had increased and their roll had been swelled by the addition of many distinguished persons. When the annual banquet took place, although one of the large halls in a London hotel was engaged they had refused as many as over seventy application for seats. It could thus be judged how prosperous the Society had grown. But he never expected that the Japan branch would grow as it had done. Like Baron Kikuchi he thought the raison d'être of the Society was greater than ever, because it was the connecting link between the sentiments and feelings of the two countries. If he might be allowed to say so, he should like to call this the English Society in Japan as distinguished from the Japan Society in London, with Sir Claude MacDonald as its President. He desired to say that the majority of the people of England were pleased to see Japan raised so high and there was no jealousy or anything of that kind. But he must caution his compatriots to take care not to be spoiled and to work themselves up to the standard of their expectations. He concluded by wishing the great success and continued growth of the Society.

Baron KOMURA was also induced to speak but did so in very few words.

Mr. K. Sonoda proposed the toast of "The Ladies." He said:—I have to perform one of the most agreeable tasks I ever experienced in my life and that is to propose the health of the fair sex. I believe this is the first occasion on which we have been honoured by the presence of ladies and we, the committee, feel specially grateful to them, for they save us from a heavy responsibility. On previous occasions we sometimes had serious complaints with regard to the arrangement of seats, the programme of speeches or the dishes and wines. Fortunately no such complaints are possible to-night. The presence of ladies here seems to have completely transformed the whole room into a paradise and there is nothing but joy and happiness all round the table (applause). The influence which ladies exercise over us men is extraordinary. I don't know what it is (laughter). They must have some magic or supernatural power for to us they are so fascinating and so angel-like. They are quite superior to us in many ways and their superiority is amply proved by the fact that as wives we treat them as our better halves and that we are quite willing to place ourselves under petticoat government (laughter and applause). Here in Japan our wives have all sorts of curious names; they are called thorny wives, stupid wives, etc., and yet they look so quiet and gentle. But I am afraid it is rather dangerous to believe in names or appearances, for what they actually do is often different from what they look or what their names indicate. So you see the ladies' magic power is pretty much the same all over the world. Some people seem to think that the ladies are going to upset our present social and political organizations and that there is a strong possibility of their becoming members of parliament, Cabinet ministers, &c. Well, I have not the slightest doubt that they can do it and I don't mind a bit if they do (applause.) But I have one fervent prayer to offer to them and that is that they will not be so cruel as to exercise their magic power to such an extent as to compel us to stay at home to nurse babies and look after other complicated household affairs (laughter): I think for these noble functions our better halves are far better qualified than ourselves. I should like to go on a little further but unfortunately my English is too poor to adequately express the warm and tender sentiments I entertain towards the ladies, and I am afraid the longer I speak the more offence I may give. I must therefore stop now and ask you to join me in heartily drinking to the health of the ladies, at the same time wishing them to be ever charming and blooming (applause.)

The CHAIRMAN said.

YOUR EXCELLENCY AND GENTLEMEN.—As there seems some hanging back in the matter of returning thanks for the eloquent speech made by my friend Mr. Sonoda, and as Lady MacDonald firmly declines to say a few words, I beg therefore to return thanks most heartily on behalf of the charming ladies of the Eastern and Western hemispheres, who have graced our dinner to-night. I am sure it will surprise and delight his numerous friends to see that Mr. Sonoda who last year earned the title of the "warlike banker" can on occasions coo like the turtle dove. Before I sit down I would like to say one thing. At a dinner recently given by the Oriental Society I said in a public manner that I for one did not believe in Rudyard Kipling's lines to the effect that "East is East and West is West and never the twain shall meet." I believe that they will meet but, I know full well the difficulties which stand in the way of this meeting believing, however, as I do that "the hand that rocks the cradle rules the world." I think that the women of both East and West should help in the good work by coming forward on occasions like this. And I say this advisedly because I see around me so many of my Japanese friends who for to-night have become grass widowers, and left their wives at home, and I appeal to them in future to help me in this matter. (Applause.)

Mr. T. KATO proposed the toast of His Excellency the Chairman. He said he had had the pleasure of doing so on a previous occasion and did his best then though he knew his powers were totally inadequate. However his admiration and respect for the Chairman were so great that he did not even attempt to evade the temptation to accept the invitation of the Committee and propose the toast again. The Chairman had presided over them twice before but he was then simply His Majesty's Minister—an office very important and distinguished but still a mere Minister. When in Japan they heard last year that the rank of the office was to be raised they hoped that Sir Claude might be appointed to the elevated post. This was done and they saw him now the direct representative of his King near the person of the Emperor. They congratulated him on his promotion and congratulated themselves on having retained him in Tokyo. His Excellency and his charming, kind-hearted and hospitable wife had so endeared themselves in the capital that it could be wished to have them remain for many years to come. Might they long prosper and enjoy good health—(Cheers).

Sir CLAUDE MACDONALD said:—

YOUR EXCELLENCIES, LADIES AND GENTLEMEN:—I beg to thank you from my heart for the enthusiastic manner in which you have received the toast proposed in such kindly terms by my friend Mr. Kato who was among the first if not the first to welcome me on my arrival in Japan six years ago. Speaking on this occasion last year I pointed out that one of the penalties attached to the office of Chairman was to listen in abashed and blushing silence to an array of one's virtues set forth in an engaging manner by the hand of a friend, and I entreated our able and energetic secretary Mr. Go, whose ability and energy seem to increase as the go on, to find another Chairman but in vain. There remains nothing for me to do but to thank you again most heartily once more to blush and—sit down.—(Loud Cheers.)

The proceedings shortly after terminated.

THE LAW COURTS.

ALLEGED INCENDIARISM.

The trial of Frederick J. Curtis (46),—now a naturalized Japanese, Takahashi Yeikichi, by name,—an employee of Messrs. Carl Rohde and Co., No. 70, Yamashita-cho, Yokohama, and residing at No. 2,245, Negishi, who is charged with having attempted to set fire to his dwelling with the purpose of obtaining two thousand yen insurance from the Commercial Union Assurance Co. No. 72, opened on June 11th in the Yokohama District Court before Judge Satomi and Public Procurator Miki.

Mr. R. Ideura was employed for the defence.

The Public Procurator opened the case for the prosecution. He said that the accused removed in January this year to his present dwelling from No. 70, Yamashita-cho. On February 10th, he insured his movable property with the Commercial Union Assurance Co., No. 72, for two thousand yen though the value of the effects was not so much as the amount insured. His purpose was merely to obtain money from the insurance office after burning the property. At 7 or 8 p.m. on April 12th, the accused wilfully set fire to the bath-room of his dwelling, providing shavings and waste soaked with kerosene oil.

Examined by the Court, Mr. Curtis said that some six or seven years ago he was adopted by the Takahashi family and married the only daughter named Take (27) of Takahashi Nobusuke. The accused was an employee of the branch office, No. 46, of Messrs. Carl Rhode & Co. His income was a hundred yen salary, thirty yen special allowance and 2½ per cent. commission on the transactions which he carried through. He employed two servants, a cook and an amah, at his house. He paid them yen 25—yen 15 and 10 respectively. Mr. B. Buxton, of the P. & O. Steam Navigation Co., No. 15, was residing with the accused. Consequently the wages of the employees were borne jointly by the accused and Mr. Buxton. The wife of the accused was living in a different house, also at Negishi. He paid twenty yen every month to her. When the accused removed to the present house, he purchased several pieces of furniture at a shop in Moto-machi. He still owed sixty yen to the dealer for the furniture as the payment was to be made in monthly installments. The cost should be taken as some twenty-five hundred yen, although there was an allegation at his preliminary examination as to twelve hundred or eight hundred yen, which estimate was made by a dealer or a bailiff. Mr. Buxton occupied a large room of the dwelling. At 7 or 8 p.m. on April 12th, fire broke out in the bath-room of his dwelling. On that day, he returned from his office to his house about 2 p.m. and at once went back to the office. At 5 p.m. he left the office again and returned to his house. He was not intoxicated. He took jirikisha returning home. He had been ill for two or three days. When he returned home, he sat in a room smoking. About 7 p.m., the female servant, Kuma, called him to supper. He replied that he would wait for Mr. Buxton. He entered the dining room some twelve minutes before they had supper. He did not know where the can of kerosene oil and empty bottles were kept by the servants.

The Court—The female servant said at the Bluff Police Office that before the accused entered the dining room, she heard a peculiar noise in the bath-room. When she went to look she found the accused, who seemed to be searching for something. The accused—I was not in the bath-room.

The accused further said that Mr. Buxton went out about 8.20 p.m. after dinner was finished. The accused had no knowledge as to who caused the fire. After the affair, the police found that some parts of the floor of the accused's sitting-room had been stained with kerosene oil. He placed his chairs on the parts stained by the oil. He did so merely for his convenience.

The Court—According to the statement given by one of your servants, the can containing kerosene oil was almost full that day. After the accident, it was found empty.

The accused—I did not know whether the can was empty. Whenever the oil was used up, I told the servants to purchase more.

Shown a piece of shaving and a small piece of waste soaked with kerosene oil, the Court asked the accused whether he recognised them. He said that he had not seen them before. As the carpenters were working in the next compound, the shaving would probably be carried by the wind into his house. He further stated that the fire broke out in the bath-room on the evening of April 12th. The flames were put out before spreading throughout the building. The bath-tub was fortunately full and with that water the fire was extinguished.

The Court asked whether the both room was locked and its window closed. The accused said that the door was kept closed with an iron hoop. The day following the accident, the accused found that the hinges of the door of the bath-room were broken. Further, a part of the fence near the room was damaged as if some one had broken in.

The Court—Suppose that the accused did not cause the fire, who did so?

The Accused—I don't know; please summon some one else.

The Court said that the accused had received a certain amount of money from an insurance office at a time when he was residing at Yamashita-cho, and when his house was destroyed. At that time, fire broke out in another house near by. By having received this money, the accused unlawfully profited, as the accused did not insure his property on that occasion.

The Judge read several statements made by police officers of the Bluff, station, the servants of the accused, Takahashi Take, the wife of the accused, etc. The statements by the police as to the cause of the fire were that (1) it occurred after the accused had entered his dining room; (2) the relations between the accused and his wife were not good, (3) the accused had insured effects costing about eight hundred yen for two thousand yen; and (4) the kerosene oil tin was found empty whereas it was filled just before the accident.

The accused's Counsel said that the accused was not a poor man. He had a piece of ground in the country. He adopted the orphan of one of his friends who died some time ago. At the beginning of this year he proceeded to Kobe on office business. When he returned home two days earlier than expected, he found his wife asleep in the arms of a Japanese whom he had not seen before. The man escaped leaving some clothing. Since then the accused was on bad terms with his wife, and the latter was living alone at No. 3,822, Mugita, Negishi. Counsel asked the Court to examine the bath-room where the fire occurred; to examine Mr. R. Fachtmann, of Messrs. Carl Rohde and Co.; Mr. B. Buxton; Take, the wife of the accused; Takahashi Nobusuke, the father of Take; and a furniture goods dealer.

The Public Procurator asked the Court to summon Kisaragi and his wife, the servants of the accused.

Examined by the Court, the accused said that he purchased the ground in the country four or five years ago in the name of his wife. He did not remember how much he paid for the property.

The Court decided to examine the bath-room and to summon Kisaragi and his wife, and the manager of Messrs. Carl Rhode as witnesses.

The case was adjourned sine die.

The price of antimony, which ranged between yen 20 and 23 up to some four or five years ago, is at present about a hundred yen. The Chugwai Shogyo says that the output in China is greatly reduced and that large enquiries have appeared from America and Europe. The prospect is that there will be a further advance.

CRICKET.

Cricket has been late in starting this year in Yokohama owing to the ground being in use so long for the football players and the turf therefore requiring a good long rest, but Saturday saw the wielders of the willow disporting themselves upon the greensward and getting in trim for what we hope will turn out a busy and interesting season. Proceedings began with a tiffin in the Pavilion, at which a departure from comparatively hoary local traditions was made, ladies sitting down with the lords of creation and thus enhancing the pleasures of the function. Dr. Emerson, Captain of Cricket, presided, and at the close of the repast proposed the health of Mr. and Mrs. L. J. Healing, the donors of the cricket marquee now in use on the ground. Mr. L. J. Healing replied and the Vice-Chairman, Mr. L. S. Hudson (Secretary) submitted the toast of "The Ladies," to which Mrs. Emerson wittily responded.

"The Rest" went to bat first and, what with very slack fielding and none too vigorous bowling, made 208 by 4.40 p.m., at which time the innings were declared, Ross and Johnson being at the wickets. Score:—

YACHTING.

During Saturday forenoon a good sailing breeze was blowing from the East, and there was every prospect of a good race for the 39 raters over the Kawasaki Buoy course. But by tiffin time the wind had moderated considerably, and doubts were freely expressed by the weather prophets as to whether the big boats could get round the course. Mary, Reiver, Maid Marion, Naniwa and Nina were all under way before the preparatory gun, moving very slowly. Kingfisher was suddenly seen to be going through the water at a pace not warranted by the paltry wind, but the explanation was at the end of a hawser, to wit, her owner's launch, which took her outside the Harbour, and gave her a fair start on a cruise down the bay. The other five yachts in the class were all close to the line on the signal to start, but so poor was the pace that Reiver, barely two lengths behind the others, was timed over two minutes after the gun. For the first half hour the yachts had little more than steerage way, and Nina turned back to her moorings. A little better wind then came along, and they got outside the Harbour Entrance, with Mary, as usual, in the lead. But the wind was very light and fickle, and Naniwa gave up before reaching the Quarantine ship, and returned to harbour, leaving Mary, Maid Marion and Reiver in the attempt at a race. Eventually a steadier breeze enabled them to turn the outer mark, and at a quarter to five o'clock Mary was sighted on her return journey, reaching along in good style for the Lightship, the Maid Marion about a mile behind, and Reiver last. At the Lightship, Mary had over an hour to finish the short distance home, but the wind was again dropping fast, and running in to the Harbour Entrance, her spinnaker kept flapping, and although helped along by the tide, she had only 25 minutes left when she turned the white light. Still it looked as if she could hardly fail to reach the line in time, but when within about 100 yards of her goal, with ten minutes left, the wind failed her, and her sails again hung idle. Eight minutes passed, and then her jibtopsail was seen to fill, and she made a last effort. It was now clearly a question of seconds, and the verandah captains at the Boat-house were keenly excited as the seconds went by. The time keeper on the mark boat was seen to raise his gun, ready to salute the winner. But as Mary seemed to be surely crossing the imaginary line, the gun was put aside, and the red flag lowered. Mary was just 35 seconds too late! Maid Marion was about half an hour behind Mary as she turned the Harbour Entrance, and Reiver about the same distance behind the Maid.

Four boats of the Mosquito Yacht Club started at 2.15 to race over the Widow Buoy course. With a soldier's wind all the way, they managed to get round in time, but it was a crawl. Pele was leading at the buoy, but turned it the wrong way, which let Winsome get the lead, and the race. Times at the finish were:—

	h.m.s.	scratch	h.m.s.
Winsome .....	5.09.59		5.09.59
Pele .....	5.12.32	do	5.12.32
Sunbeam .....	5.19.03	5 minutes	5.14.03
Elsa .....	5.21.29	3 minutes	5.18.29

Four of the Lark Class raced round the Mandarin Bluff mark, via the buoy off Tachibana. Lark No. 11 won, with No. 4 close up. These two were followed at long intervals by No. 13 and No. 14.

We learn that Winsome's protest against Edna because of a foul in last race has been sustained.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

On the night of June 12th, hail was experienced in Kanazawa.

Vice-Admiral T. Matsunaga has been released from active service.

Marquis Ito, Resident-General in Korea, will leave Oiso on June 20th for his post.

Major-General T. Yamane has been appointed Commander of the Shimonoseki defences.

Mr. Victor Grossi has been appointed Russian Consul-General in Yokohama and Mr. Zinovi Polianovsky Consul at Nagasaki. On June 7th, their exequaturs were granted by the Foreign Office.

A new case of plague was reported in Osaka on June 9th. The patient died the same evening. The same day another case appeared in Kobe.

The Emperor has given his consent to a proposed wedding between Princess Sudzu, younger sister of Prince Kuni, and Captain Count Mibu of the Cavalry.

A thunder storm was experienced on June 12th at Maidzuru and surrounding places. Damage was caused in cultivated fields, and a man was killed by lightning.

According to the Captain of the steamer Tosa Maru, which arrived at Moji on June 12th, plague is prevalent in Bombay. About a hundred cases were reported every day.

M. Jules Harmand, French Minister, who will shortly leave for home, will proceed to-day, June 15th, to the Palace to take farewell audience of the Emperor. His Majesty will entertain him at noon in the Takenoma Hall.

A Japanese who was detained by the Russians at Vladivostock a little before the outbreak of the war has been released and arrived at Moji on June 13th. According to him, some twenty men from Fukuoka prefecture are still in prison at Vladivostock.

Samples of new raw silk have been put on the Yokohama market. The prices were yen 1,100 for Kokuho-sha filature and yen 1,050 for Yenshu filature. Taking the foregoing quotations, Shinshu No. 1 filature is expected to be about yen 1,030. The staple last named, however, is not yet on the market.

H. Nagase (21), formerly an employee of the Danish Consulate, No. 209, Yokohama, has been arrested by the Kaga-cho police and was removed on June 11th to the District Court. On the night of June 2nd, the man broke into the Consulate, and stole a coat valued at thirty yen, which he pawned for yen 1.50.

A man who was detained at the Tobe Police Office, Yokohama, on suspicion of theft, seized the sword of a policeman on the morning of June 11th while the officer was watching him and attempted to commit suicide by wounding himself in the throat with it. He was at once removed to the Juzen Hospital.

The Nankai Railway Co., which was conducting negotiations with a foreign firm in Yokohama for raising a loan of one million yen, held a general meeting on June 11th in Osaka to arrive at a decision. It is said that of the issue price of the debentures will be ninety-two yen and the interest 4½ per cent. The conditions will be similar to those of the Kwansei Railway Co., which recently raised a loan in London through Messrs. Samuel Samuel and Co.

The Union Church Sunday School picnic to Sannotani on Saturday, passed off, as all entertainments organised by Mr. Clarence Griffin invariably do, entirely successfully. The day though dull was entirely windless and the youngsters and oldsters had the happiest of good times clambering about the hills, racing along the sands, and taking part in the sports provided for them by the energetic superintendent and his willing band of assistants.

During May, the average prices of commodities were:—

	Domestic Consumption	May	April	May, 1905
Exports .....	117.68	118.29	114.68	106.78
Imports .....	116.22	117.56	115.44	119.63
Average .....	115.25	117.36	114.82

The figures show a fall by 0.52 per cent. on those of April. A continuous drop took place in sake, oil, kerosene and vegetables, matches, raw silk, coal, sugar, etc. Salt, soy, eggs, cement, lacquer, copper, Italian cloth, vail, etc., show rises.

HIS MAJESTY THE EMPEROR OF JAPAN: A PERSONAL STUDY.

In the May number of The World's Work, and also in the Fortnightly Review, Mrs. Hugh Fraser has a remarkably interesting article entitled "A Personal Study of the Japanese Emperor," which deserves careful perusal. She writes in an enthusiastic vein of the "little child who, fifty years ago, was the most precious thing in the still mediæval splendours of Kyoto, in whose smile hundreds of devoted attendants rejoiced, whose little tempers or indispositions threw the whole golden-robed hierarchy of the palace into consternation—who must, as he grew up, have been puzzled to find any important point of difference between his imperial and imperious young self and the gods above—has lived to become a modern constitutional monarch of the most conscientious pattern, an example to other sovereigns—an object of respectful admiration to the civilized world."

Mrs. Fraser then proceeds:—

There is an artistic harmony in the fitness of the Emperor to be the nation's ruler at this moment, for his personal experience makes him its faithful exponent. Had the succession changed during these thirty-eight years, the monarch of to-day would not only have less sympathy with the elders of the people, with the valued and venerable traditions of his country's past, but the living link with that past, the personality which has been with them through these tremendous years, would be lost to his subjects. In the tidal wave of new conditions which has swept over the country, in the cataclysmic changes which have stirred it to its foundations, it has been an ever-present assurance and inspiration to follow the same leader with whom it took the first steps, to behold through storm and stress, through good report and evil report, the same great figure at the nation's head.

When, as a boy of fifteen (if any Japanese prince is ever really a boy!) he mounted the throne, and gave his solemn promise to grant some form of representative government, a promise which he has fulfilled in the widest sense, the country was taking those first trembling steps in the direction of liberalism and enlightenment. It grew up with its Emperor, so to speak, and the growth was potentially sudden and complete. That which it required in Europe a thousand years of chequered struggle to produce and perfect—constitutional government—by which national and individual rights are equally protected and assured—Japan, the Benjamin of the nations, received entire at the hands of indulgent destiny. The fruits of centuries of scientific research, of individual effort, of slowly evolved wisdom—of the hundreds of noble failures which are given ungrudgingly to lay the foundation for every atom of true advancement and success—of all these, Japan in one day, inherited the benefits and to her own wants applied the perfected values. As a nation she may be said to have given us something very like the spectacle which masters in the study of human nature have longed in vain to behold in the individual—the spectacle of a being born in full possession of the accumulated learning and experience of its forbears.

But even in such a portentous birth, could the miracle take place, that which we call the personal equation would modify results by the combination of one concrete individuality with a thousand intangible forces handed on from its shadowy ancestry. Knowledge would be re-distributed, judgments differentiated, and it is conceivable that the immediate parent might scarcely recognize his offspring in its final development, much less be able to predicate of its actions with any certainty. Far more must this be the case when not an individual but a nation is in question. In judging of the Japan of to-day—and to-morrow—we must give full weight to the immense importance of the personal equation. Those who look from afar are apt to imagine that they are contemplating some brilliant product of competitive examination, a being to be set at once in its unchangeable place, with all its uses and properties labelled and catalogued. There could not be a more profound mistake. The truth is that we of the West have given our great slowly-forged weapons of warfare and science and law and ethics—weapons which we are not always able to wield perfectly ourselves—into the hands of a politically young and a dangerously vitalized entity, the product of many centuries of unmixed descent, deriving from that descent (and from exceptionally favorable natural conditions) iron nerve, indomitable will, apparently inexhaustible patience, but possessing also some unfathomed fount of Oriental passion which, once stirred, answers to no written laws and sweeps all before it in the outburst of its irresistible strength.

Such is the people over whom the Emperor Mutsu Hito has ruled for thirty-eight years. So completely is His Majesty identified with the movement of the time, so intact is still the reverence with which he is regarded, that one is tempted to ask: "Is the Emperor responsible for modern Japan? Or does modern Japan explain the Emperor?"

It will assist us in the study of his character to hear what his subjects have to say about him. The answer to the above question, if given by a typical Japanese, would be that to the Emperor's "virtues" and those of his ancestors should be ascribed the credit of every advancement and every victory. That is, in full twentieth century, the country's only dogma. The higher you go in military and government circles, the more emphatically do you hear this dogma proclaimed. For many years I was impelled to doubt the sincerity of the belief. Its asseveration by men familiar with modern thought, men who had read and assimilated the best in history and philosophy, sounded like a magnificent bit of hypocrisy. But there is no controverting the testimony which daily presents itself, no possibility of questioning the honesty of the conviction. When such men as Marshal Oyama, General Kuroki, General Nogi, and Admiral Togo ascribe victories, every detail of which they have strenuously and patiently organized, to the "virtues of the Emperor," I know that it is not a form of words, but the expression of an immutable belief that without such protection their best efforts would have been made in vain.

Thinking to find a divergence, I have tested the camp of the ultra Radicals, have—I hope they will forgive me—prepared little snares for their orthodoxy on this point. There are here, as everywhere, a certain number of born objectors (we call them obstructionists at home)—men who find fault with every action of the Government in which they have not been accorded a place. They are not less well informed than their compatriots in office, and could discuss most subjects with men of their own standing in any country. After listening to some jeremiad on the mistakes of the Government, I have suggested, hypocritically, that perhaps the Emperor was to blame. Far from it! My Radical would rise up in his wrath and "have me to know" that by no possibility could the Emperor make a mistake—no wrong or undesirable thing could come from that sacred source! The measure in question, whatever it might be, had been distorted in transmission—the waywardness of men could interfere even with the rulings of Providence! I would bow my head, delighted at having elicited the outburst and realized that dutiful subjects, like good people in other relations of life, are granted "les grâces d'état."

What is the "virtue of the Emperor?" If we can understand the real meaning of the strange phrase, it will help to make clear to us many things in his life and character, for it gives the key to his position toward his subjects. Here is the explanation as given to me a few days ago by one who stands high in His Majesty's confidence and has been for many years in close attendance upon him.

"We do not call ourselves Christians," said my friend, "but the very truth about us is that the moving force with us is religion. This is the never-to-be-spoken foundation of our loyalty, our statesmanship, our naval and military prowess. We know that the ancestors of the Emperor (who are also ours, since the whole nation forms but one family) are on our side, that they watch over us and assist us to overcome our enemies. This is what we mean when we speak of winning victories by the virtue of the Emperor. You in Europe say, By the protection of Heaven: By Divine intervention; but we believe that in reality most of the credit of success is given to the men who are the visible instruments of it. Our leaders, indeed, leave nothing to chance. The most earnest consultation takes place before every move, no effort is spared to assure the result. But generals, officers, and men, feel that those efforts would be of small avail were not the unseen Heavenly Powers on their side, and these are, for us, the imperial ancestors, who, beholding the people loyal to their representative on earth, reward his virtues and his subjects' fidelity by bestowing all necessary assistance and protection. The Emperor is our father—each of us feels toward him the strongest filial affection—and you know what the words mean in Japan, but he is also to us as a god, and so long as we are faithful and obedient to him, we are fulfilling the mandates of religion."

These are very strong words. Still more emphatic were some addressed to me by a well-known Japanese official last spring, a man who has for many years represented his country abroad and who has had every opportunity of testing and modifying his beliefs by, and according to, foreign standards. We were discussing the possibilities of dramatizing my romance "The Stolen Emperor" for the benefit of the "War" widows and orphans.

"We must alter the title," said this gentleman. "There was nothing wrong in your writing a story about an emperor who lived hundreds of years ago, but when you produce your play, his title must be changed. It would be horrible sacrilege to bring an emperor into the drama. To us he is a god. You do not put Christ on the stage."

I knew that the speaker had no intention of irreverence to my beliefs in saying this. I reminded myself that the Japanese conception of a god is very far removed from the Christian one—that it more resembles our veneration for the great saints than our adoration of an infallible, omnipotent, omniscient Being. If the Japanese monarch is as a god to his people, he is a god in exile, a sacred soul imprisoned in a human body, with all the disabilities of that environment, vulnerable to suffering, pledged to death, liable in certain obscure cases to be deceived by evil in counsellors—yet, by virtue of his office (which can only be filled by a descendant of past emperors) removed, as by an impassable gulf from all other human beings. The Emperor's own deep-rooted belief in his right to claim supernatural aid must be the only force which gives him strength to support the strain of his terribly exalted, and isolated position.

And what manner of man is he, who was called to fill that position as a mere lad and has never, during a reign of nearly forty years, belied his own beliefs or betrayed his people's trust? who has given his subjects all that modern education and modern progress can bestow, without allowing them to lose a particle of their religious faith?

When we seek to pierce the cloud of mystery which surrounds this ancient Eastern throne, there slowly shines out a distinct and luminous personality who recognizes the fact that here is unusual intellect, marked force of character, admirable moderation and self-control; we see in the Emperor's actions a lively and tender beneficence for the people committed to his care, the courageous wisdom which chooses the best for them, and the stern, silent sense of duty which enables him to carry out his decisions unmoved by personal considerations or popular clamour.

The most sceptical must confess that although we are not as his subjects believe, contemplating something beyond mere humanity, we have at least before us a very great and remarkably noble man.

It was at the age of eight that the little prince, owing to the death of his brother, was declared the heir to the throne. From that time forward he was surrounded by such a hedge of sanctity and ceremony that one wonders how his strong individual character had space to develop itself. Companionship was not wanting to him, however, for it has been and still is the custom to give an imperial prince a few comrades of his own age, chosen from the flower of the nobility, to share his studies and pastimes. One of these play-fellows, a little older than the then heir-apparent was the late Prince Sanjo, and the tie became a life-long one, for Prince Sanjo, even in those early days, showed a strength and wisdom which never erred or wavered through all the storms that were to follow.

These storms were brewing all through the Emperor's childhood, and although the outward form of his education differed not at all from that which had been bestowed on his ancestors for hundreds of years past change and turmoil were in the air, and penetrated even the golden seclusion of his sheltered life. The Emperor Komei, his father, was a man of ability and courage. He felt the temperature of the changing time, and did what he could—he died at the age of thirty-seven—for the cause of the progress he desired and but partly understood. There was but little intimacy between the reigning Emperor and his son. The father's exalted position surrounded him with an inviolable barrier of etiquette and courtly observance, and the profound external respect with which it was necessary even for his son to approach him, rendered familiar intercourse impossible; yet there was influence exerted on the one side to put the Prince in possession of actual facts to guide him in his judgment on them; and on his part a quiet but alert receptivity which did its work so well during those early years that when at fifteen he mounted the throne, he was well equipped to sustain his great responsibilities.

Two of his chief characteristics—rather discrepant ones at first sight—were already strongly marked in him at that time. One was the strength of will which has stood him in such good stead; the other his talent for selecting good advisers and honestly following their counsels. So much has been said about the internal troubles of Japan during that epoch, that all educated persons must have a fairly clear knowledge of the desperately difficult conditions which the Emperor had to encounter. It was in great part due to his good sense, tenacity and honest purpose, that no false step was made. His mild and notable generosity to those who ranged themselves against him has its reward to-day in the devoted adherence of the men who were then his foes. I remember, many years ago, a dinner at the Palace—a great official dinner—where among the guests were many of the old leaders of rebellion, old upholders of the Shogunate; the last Shogun himself, Prince Tokugawa, proud, silent, grim, sat opposite to me, and I wondered if any human emotion could show itself on that impassive face. At that moment the Emperor raised his glass and bowed in kindly smiling fashion to his ancient opponent. The face changed, was suffused for one illuminating moment with a glow of responsive fire. It seemed as if the Emperor were once more thanking the Shogun for the splendidly patriotic act, when, after years of struggle, he voluntarily laid his power and his prerogatives at the Emperor's feet "for the good of the country," and as if Prince Tokugawa, looking back—and looking forward—for Japan, said to himself once more, "It was well done."

Not only to the living, who laid down their arms, has the Emperor been generous, but to the dead who fell in the ranks of insurrection. The great Samurai Saigo, was after his death, restored to all his former honours. The Emperor, recognizing that his motives were pure though his reasoning was mistaken, generously chose to overlook all personal offence to himself.

His perspicacity in gathering round him, at the beginning of his reign, the best and strongest men of the time, has furnished him and the country with that invaluable group of councillors called the "Genro" or "Elder Statesmen" as the Japanese translate it for us. These are the men who have stood round the throne since the restoration—who faced all the storms and shocks at the Emperor's side and to whom he has turned faithfully for help and counsel. Few countries have produced, in the moment of greatest need, such a band of strong, wise, conscientious patriots as those who enjoy this title of "Elder Statesmen" in Japan. Its honour will die with them for it refers solely to those who gathered round the boy sovereign in the stormy days of his opening reign, and of whom some have died, others grown old in his and the country's service—Ito, Okuma, Inouye, Sanjo, Katsura, Matsukata, Iwakura, Yamagata, Oyama,—some of these have passed away, but the list is still long, and every name is an illustrious one.

But the Emperor's desire to put the best brains in the country at the country's service, has made him generously willing to listen also to the opinions of young and still rising men. In the Privy Council these are encouraged to express their views fearlessly as also in the deliberations of the general staff of the army and navy, from which the Emperor chose certain members to constitute the Military Council at the beginning of the war with Russia. In this council the youngest members may give their views frankly, the Emperor believing that valuable suggestions are thus elicited; and the example has been followed by the generals in the field, who call young officers into the camp councils together with the seniors, and adopt the juniors' plans without hesitation if they appear to be the best. "We are a young nation," said a Japanese in speaking of the equal rights conceded to all at the council board, "and while we treasure the advice of the elders, we feel that the younger men are often more in touch with the spirit of the time, and can give valuable assistance, especially in military matters, where each day almost brings some new discovery or experience."

This enlightened attitude of the Emperor's mind, so well balanced between the conservative past and the progressive present, has been one of the most important factors of his successful reign. "Keep all that was good in the old—take all that is good in the new" seems to have been his motto; but his natural bent is strongly conservative, and in private affairs, in religion, in the Government of the household, and in the constitution of the family relations, he keeps closely to the methods of his forefathers. Both he and the Empress have done much to encourage female education and the opening of many doors closed hitherto to the legitimate ambitions and activities of women. But the young Princesses have been brought up very much on the old lines; in their education great stress has been laid on the feminine virtues, the feminine accomplishments, the perfection of training in courtesy, grace and sweetness, the mastery of every shade of classical high-flown language reserved for those of imperial rank; but they have been taught no sciences and their education, when compared with that received by daughters of the nobility at the Peeresses School (an institution equipped with every modern improvement), seems very old-fashioned indeed. If this exception requires an excuse, one may be found in the Emperor's own desire to see one generation more of typical Japanese great ladies before the species passes away. For it is a very exquisite specimen of womanliness, formed by long centuries of hard and constant training, and now its time is short.

It seems unfortunate that the hundreds of charming girls who are assimilating the best in Western education while the salutary exercises of the gymnasium and the playground are turning them into tall, strong, broad-shouldered women, should not have been able to retain the charm and urbanity of manner for which their mothers are remarkable. The mothers look small and fragile beside their daughters; the physical advantages of modern training have completely altered the physique of growing girls in Japan; but the manners have changed, too, and it is only among the older women that one sees them in their perfection. Small blame to the Emperor if he chose to have his young daughters follow the old traditions.

It is well known that the Emperor finds great pleasure and comfort in the society of the Empress. When the day's work is over—and His Majesty's working day, beginning at dawn and frequently continuing till midnight, is a strenuous one—he repairs to her apartments, and they talk over things very fully and confidentially. It is Her Majesty's delight to find new interests and pleasures for these moments of relaxation, to use her woman's wit to draw the Emperor's mind from the cares of state to pleasant and cheerful subjects. A new book, a picture, an album such as one sent to Her Majesty in commemoration of the Japanese play given in New York last spring, these things are set aside for the Emperor's half hour of rest and recreation. Then the attendants withdraw, the only one who refuses to be dismissed being the Emperor's little Yorkshire terrier, a venerable court lady now some seventeen years old, who never leaves her master's side. With the assurance of impunity she jumps on the Empress's lap and listens to conversations which no one else is permitted to hear. It is on record that one day she fell asleep there unnoticed; Her Majesty wished to rise, but ere she could do so the Emperor cried "Do not move! You will wake the dog!" whereupon the Empress subsided laughing, to wait the convenience of the fluffty tyrant on her knee.

The Emperor rises at about five and goes at once to his study to prepare for the business of the day. In ordinary times the room is closed on Sundays, His Majesty taking that one day of comparative rest; but since the beginning of the war the holiday has had to be sacrificed, the heavy stream of work permitting of no such interruption. There until nine o'clock, when the audiences begin, and after two, when they have ceased, every manner of detail passes under the Emperor's eyes. During the war the mass of matter was enormous, for besides reading and dictating despatches, discussing every move with the Army Council, conferring with his Ministers on the all-important question of finance and a dozen other subjects of pressing interest, the Emperor made the well-being of his soldiers his own especial care, and devoted every moment that could be spared to studying the questions of commissariat and field hygiene, besides thinking out every possible way in which he could lessen their sufferings and send them bodily comforts and moral encouragement. Every unnecessary expenditure in the palace was retrenched in order that comforts might be sent to the men in the field. Little gifts of biscuits, chocolate, tobacco, were packed by thousands in the palace, and committed to the marvelously efficient transport department. The old folks, the women and children left to till the lonely farms, were not forgotten, and the Soldiers' Families' Fund received substantial help.

The only recreation the Emperor permitted himself during those eighteen months of stress was the composing of an occasional short poem in the severely condensed Chinese style, of which he is a master. The few he wrote during the war turn on the hardships being undergone by his loyal servants in the field, on the desolation their absence has brought on thousands of humble homes in Japan. Through the classic perfection of the lines there rings a thrilling pity and love. It is the heart of a father aching over the sorrows of his children. In the bitter cold of last winter—1904-1905—His Majesty, not content with the fullest official reports, sent his Grand Master to look into the conditions at the front, to ascertain by visiting every camp and outpost, how the soldiers were faring. When Count Hijikata returned with his harrowing tale of frightful suffering caused by the cold, the Emperor was broken-hearted. Nothing more could be done—the Manchuria winter must drag its icy season through—but the Emperor would not take his ease while his men were freezing, and the order to discontinue all heating of the palace till the war should be over showed that his sympathy was with them day by day.

Much of the Emperor's time is taken up with audiences. The Crown Prince is generally the first visitor in the morning, then come Ministers, officers returning from the war, distinguished foreigners, the other imperial princes—each day has its hours so filled that Marquis Ito is often invited to lunch or dine with His Majesty in order to discuss business quietly during the meal. Also the Emperor, as head of the hierarchy, has many religious duties which none else can perform. The year opens with the ceremony called Shi Ho Hai, a Buddhist feast of worship offered to heaven and earth, or as some authorities put it "to the Four Quarters of the Globe." On the 3rd of January comes the "Worship of the Origin" to consecrate the work of the year, and close upon it the Seiji-Hajime, or opening of government business, this last, however, not being, like the others, a general holiday.

Towards the end of January a day is set for the commemoration of the late Emperor Komei. On the 11th of January is celebrated the Anniversary of the foundation of the Empire, in March the festival of the spring equinox. This again is of Buddhistic origin, its name signifying "the Farther Shore of the River." It is set apart for prayers intended to effect the purification of departed souls and the Emperor's intercessions are offered for the spirits of the predecessors. On the 3rd of April comes the anniversary of the death of Jimmu Tenno, the first Emperor of Japan.

There are no great feasts at which the Emperor must officiate during the Summer, but with the autumn equinox the series opens again. On that occasion the ceremonial is the same as in the spring. The great feast of the New Rice, corresponding to our harvest home, takes place on the 17th of October, when the Emperor offers the first fruits of the rice harvest in thanksgiving to heaven. On the 23rd of November there is another religious ceremony when the "new rice" is offered to the Emperor himself; but between the two feasts has come the celebration of his own birthday, the 3rd of November, which is also a religious festival. The ceremonial on all these occasions is one of severe simplicity, even the feasts of Buddhistic origin being carried out with Shinto rites. The following description, taken down from the lips of an eye-witness, gives a strange and impressive picture of one of these ceremonies. It refers to the New Year's festival.

"The 1st of January commences at the imperial palace with the religious service performed by His Majesty alone. It is celebrated at five o'clock a.m. by torchlight, in the palace garden. A part of the lawn, about four yards square, is covered with a soft matting which is commonly used in the house. The articles His Majesty requires for the ceremony are placed on a small table. They consist of incense, an antique lamp, oil, and saké (wine). A screen shuts off the four sides of the place of ceremonial. The Emperor, costumed in the Japanese fashion of old, proceeds from the palace, followed by his chamberlains, also garbed in the ancient style and by the court officials. . . . The Emperor enters the tabernacle alone and the screen is closed, the attendants remaining outside. He Majesty faces in turn the north, the east, the south and the west, and prays for happiness and prosperity for his people and country; he also beseeches his ancestors to grant their blessings."

To this long list of religious services one more; and that a most memorable one, was added last year. The Emperor travelled to the far away province of Yamato, the birth-place of his line, to give solemn thanks at the ancient Shrines of Ise for the glorious conclusion of the war. In the bright autumn weather, accompanied by the highest civil and military functionaries of the land, he journeyed down to the storied province, which stands for all that is loveliest in nature and bravest in the human spirit of Japan. The day he left Tokyo it seemed as if every man, woman and child in the city had turned out to speed him on his way. Among the crowd of officials at the station was a venerable lady, close on eighty years of age, whom few had ever seen before. This was the Emperor's mother, come to give him her blessing and her homage in this moment when he went to lay the nation's triumphs at the shrine of the nation's deity. Two days' travelling through roads lined with millions of subjects, who thronged to cheer him rapturously, brought him to Yamada in Ise, to the little old town where the streets are narrow and the people are poor, and no hint of change has penetrated yet. Anxiously the priests of the shrines and the foremost citizens consulted about where their beloved Emperor could be fitly lodged. The best houses in the place were all too mean for such a guest, yet each owner hoped that his home would be honoured by sheltering the sovereign. But the Emperor had other thoughts. In this moment of solemn joy and thankfulness he chose to be near the poorest in the poor old town. In a narrow thoroughfare is a modest building used as an office by the priest of the shrine. It stands close to the street, and across the way are a number of mean little shops, fish shops, fruit shops, charcoal dealers' dens, places whence the hawkers start in the morning with their jumble of wares for customers as poor as themselves. The little children swarm out into the sunshine, the women wash and cook on their doorsteps, the old people doddle about with the tiniest of their grandchildren on their backs.

"But your Majesty—this will never do," cried the horrified officials, "if indeed this house is to be honored by the Imperial presence, trade must be stopped, the shops closed, this crowd of low-class people must be sent away!"

"I have a wish," replied the Emperor, "to be close to the poorest of my subjects for these few days. Not only shall none of them be sent away, but I forbid the slightest interference with the occupations by which they earn their livelihood. Let everything go on as if I were not here."

So the inhabitants of a poor little street in Ise became the envied of a whole nation. To very few of the rank and file will it ever be granted to rise up and lie down, to go and come for three days, within a few yards of the Emperor's sacred person. There is to the Japanese, a sacramental virtue in his presence and those who have thus enjoyed it are considered blest beyond all words.

Soon after his return from Ise the Emperor sent his representative, Prince Iwakura, to carry out the pious duty of announcing the conclusion of peace to two illustrious shades. Of all the great departed spirits who hovered over the armies of Japan, watching, praying, inspiring, none, in Japanese belief, could have more anxiously watched the course of the war than these, the great Jimmu Tenno, who founded the heaven-sprung dynasty 2,500 years ago, and the Emperor Komei, the present sovereign's father. It was their due to receive the solemn announcement of the triumphal conclusion of the war. So Prince Iwakura traveled down to Yamato and ascended the lonely mountain of Unebi, where the founder's ashes rest, and spoke—as to a living man—of the good tidings of peace. Then he visited that other tomb in Kyoto where Komei found repose after his short and harassed, but noble, life and brought the message from the son to the father. This constant turning to the dead, confiding in their love, appealing to their sympathy, adding to their joy, is a duty never forgotten by the Emperor. His messages of farewell to the princes of his family who have passed away are thrilling with the vitalities of belief and love. When Prince Arisugawa lay on his bier, the victim of his ardent devotion to the service of his country in the China-Japan war, his family knelt round him in the silence of the inner chamber while the Emperor's grand master of ceremonies offered him the last gifts, spoke to him the last message of the master he had loved and served so well. It must have been a strange and impressive scene—the Prince, robed in the old court dress of pure white silk—(I remember his taking me round his palace to show me the portraits of his stern, impassive ancestors all clothed in the same garb)—his wife and the young prince and princess kneeling through the first silent hours of the fifty days' watch begun by the coffin and ended by the grave—and the imperial messenger looking down in the dead face and speaking this greeting to the unhearing ears:

"We wish to express to you, Taruhito, our sense of our many and great obligations to you for your many and great services to us and to our country during your whole life. At the time of the great restoration you took an active part, and by your wise counsel assisted us greatly. During the present war you have again done us great and good service by your assistance in our deliberations. You have been a pillar of support to us. To our infinite sorrow you have not lived to see the end of the war. Unfortunately it has pleased God to remove you from us, from your country and from your family."

MUTSU HIRO."

In a short sketch like the present one, it is difficult to seize on all the salient points in the character and career of such a man as the Emperor of Japan, but two of the subjects which have most constantly occupied his thoughts must be touched upon in order that foreign readers may form a just estimate of his life's work. These are the institution of the army and the spread of education. Any direct communication from the Emperor to his subjects on a public matter takes the form of a "re-scrip" and it is in these documents, which are instantly published in every paper in the country, that we obtain not only a close insight into His Majesty's line of thought, but also into the parental relation which he fills in the lives of his subjects.

CORRESPONDENCE.

VISIT TO THE FAMINE DISTRICT.

(TO THE EDITOR OF THE "JAPAN MAIL.")

SIR,—In company with the Rev. W. E. Lampe, of the Sendai Famine Relief Committee, I recently made a visit to the part of Japan where the destitution prevails. He was making the fourth distribution of funds received from various sources, and our trip was to the northern part of Miyagi Province.

Leaving the railway at the Kogota station we went first to the town of Furukawa, which is the county seat of Shida County. We found the head official to be a practical and energetic man who had been appointed to this office because of his known fitness and ability. He received us most cordially and expressed the deep sense of gratitude that was felt by the people on account of the liberal gifts that had already been received. A donation of 840 yen was handed to him as the portion which had been allotted to that county. In it there had been found to be 24 homes, and 103 people, who were entirely destitute. There also 738 families, and 3,054 persons, that must have help of some sort either in the way of employment or food.

Various methods had been resorted to to provide for all these. Some had been employed, during the winter, in repairing roads; and now a large number were engaged in making over the rice fields. Others were making baskets, sandals, hats, straw rope, traps for catching fish, etc. The families of soldiers were especially looked after, and are giving their attention especially to the manufacture of writing paper. The products of such labour are purchased at the Government office and the money thus received afforded immediate and necessary help. The intention of the officials is to make every person earn his or her living, as far as possible.

In a store house adjoining the Head Office was a pile of flour that had just been received from Seattle, and which was soon to be sent out to those who were destitute. Also several sacks of seed potatoes that have been bought by the Government and are to be distributed to the farmers at the proper season and as circumstances require.

As we were on our way to Nakaniida, the county seat of Kami county, we saw large numbers of men and women at work in the rice fields, making changes in the boundaries and system of irrigation.

The head official at Nakaniida also welcomed us and received the contribution of 494 yen with evident gladness and hearty thanks. He reported the condition in his own district; which had not so large a population as the other, and on that account did not receive as large a contribution.

From Nakaniida we went to the village of Miyazaki, and there found almost one hundred of the distressed people gathered at the town office for the purpose of receiving help. This consisted in the distribution to each of a small amount of Indian corn, dried potatoes, and a kind of root belonging to the lotus family. A part of the number received in addition the sum of 5 sen in cash, being a contribution of a former resident of the village who is now living in Formosa.

The appearance of the waiting crowd was such as to indicate dire need in the case of all. The expression of sorrow and want on many of the faces was truly pitiful. The clothing was old and badly worn; and in most cases only sufficient to cover the body.

As one feeble woman stood waiting for her portion the head official remarked, "She is one of the most destitute of all. Her home is four miles distant among the hills, and she has only one meal a day." Some live ten miles away.

Little as it was the poor people received it most gratefully, and went away evidently with lighter hearts. When another distribution would be made was not known. Only as the means are supplied can such help be given. The purpose of the officials in charge is to see that no one dies of starvation; but up to that point large numbers are obliged to suffer.

In Miyazaki township there are 530 houses, and a population of 4,258. Of this number 1082 are destitute, 516 are able to labour; and 570 are children, or invalids, and entirely dependent.

After the distribution we went to the home of the Headman of the village, who is a Christian.

While we were eating our supper the various officials and prominent men of the place gathered in an adjoining room; and when we had finished we were asked to address them on the subject of Christianity; and there was careful attention and apparent interest in the thoughts that were presented.

The next morning the head of the village and a policeman kindly went with us to see some of the cases of distress.

The first was that of Tsunejiro Okamoto. His home was an utterly bare room, with the ground for a floor and a hollow place in it for cooking the food. Here lived the man, his wife, his wife's mother and five children. There were no beds, or covering at night, beyond the thin garments worn during the day. The wife's mother was an invalid, and two of the children were attending school. The father was a day labourer, and was able to earn two yen and ten sen per month. His wife's earnings were one yen and sixty-eight sen per month; and one daughter received one yen and forty-six sen. Three of the children had been sent to a home in Sendai opened by Miss Phelps for the relief of such cases.

We next went to the home of Shigetaro Kamada. The family consisted of the man, his wife and two children. They had lost their home and everything by fire a few months before; and husband and wife together were able to earn three yen and seventy eight sen per month. One child had also been sent to the home in Sendai. They were eating boiled carrot leaves for food, and weaving baskets for their occupation.

The next place was the home of a widow named Teyoshi Suzuki. She is able to earn but one yen and twenty-six sen per month. She has one son, ten years of age, who is attending school.

Naaji Ishii is a carpenter with a wife and five children. For some time he had been unable to work on account of sickness. He was now better; but owing to the general poverty he finds it difficult to get employment. Two of the children were old enough to go out to work; and the total earnings of the family is but five yen and forty-six sen per month.

These facts were furnished to me by the head of the village and can be relied upon. The persons described are but ordinary cases illustrating the destitution which prevails over a large region. In some localities the number who are thus needing assistance is even greater. There will be some relief in the month of June, when the winter wheat and some of the vegetables will be ripening; but a very large number will need help of some kind for several months to come; or until the gathering of the rice crop in the fall. It is estimated that about half a million must have assistance of some sort; and of that number two hundred thousand are destitute, or wholly dependent. The officials and Government are making strenuous efforts to meet the wants of all, and are worthy of the confidence and sympathy of the generous people everywhere.

The native Christians in the famine district and vicinity have shown their interest and sympathy by the contribution of some 40,000 bags containing about two quarts of rice in each. These are made of towels that can afterwards be utilized as such. In each one is a copy of one of the Gospels, of which 20,000 have been supplied by the American Bible Society. On the outside is printed a cross; on one side of which are the Chinese characters "Christian Sympathy Bag"; and on the other the name of the church or individual making the gift. On the back is the Chinese character, "Love."

Since my return to Yokohama I have received from the head official at Miyazaki an official statement as to the use of a donation placed in his hands; in which are given the names of all the recipients with the amount received, and the personal seal of each. This is the universal method of distributing the supplies of whatever kind; and each official is thus able to produce a voucher for whatever contributions have come into his hands. Those who have made donations can thus be sure that such gifts have not been misappropriated or squandered; while a great many worthy and suffering people have been relieved.

Yokohama, June 6th, 1906.

THE WEALTH OF JAPAN.

(TO THE EDITOR OF THE "JAPAN MAIL.")

SIR,—In your reply to my letter—both published in the Mail of June 6—, the last paragraph says: "Our correspondent has constructed a paradox which sounds very pretty but which labours under a defect not infrequent in such figures of speech." Criticism then follows, based upon the paradox as quoted from the Mail's reprint of my letter (last paragraph, but one). Unfortunately, the great defect in the paradox as printed and quoted was made in the Mail office—presumably by typographical error. The paradox in my letter (which I reproduce from a copy of the letter itself) was stated thus: "For, the Keisai Zasshi argues from an unverified sum of national wealth to what seems to the Mail an absurd ratio of taxation; whereas the Mail argues from an unverified ratio of taxation to what, according to estimates hitherto given seems an absurd sum of national wealth." The words italicised are omitted in the Mail's reprint, and in the Mail's quotation, of my letter. That omission makes a vital defect in my paradox by perverting its sense and by giving to the word "absurd"—to which the Mail takes exception—a vitally different context. To say that a thing is absurd would be dogmatism which the Mail might fairly criticise. To say that a thing, "according to estimates hitherto given, seems absurd" is wholly different. The only other sense in which my letter contains the word "absurd"—but not quoting it—was to say: "the Keisai Zasshi argues from an unverified sum of national wealth to what seems to the Mail an absurd ratio of taxation?" and in the same sense and context, "results which the Mail would show to be absurd." Now, if the word "absurd" as there used in my letter does not describe the attitude of the Mail's article of May 23 towards the remarks of the Keisai Zasshi and a "certain statistician" referred to, then we may safely leave the careful reader to find for himself the correct descriptive word.

The vital error above indicated above led me to make this reply. But, while writing, I beg to add some other comments on what the Mail has said in criticism of my letter.

The Mail says that I did "not appear to have read our article carefully before setting out to traverse it," and that I seem to have misconceived the questions at issue, which the Mail proceeds to define. The best answer to these statements and to the arguments based thereupon is simply to quote one paragraph from the Mail's leader of May 23 and to italicise some of the words. Thus, the third paragraph is:

"Passing to the question of taxation, our contemporary notes that while the wealth of the country aggregates 13,000 million yen approximately, the total taxes levied by the Central Government and the Communes are 278,436,813 yen, so that the taxes amount to 2.3 per cent. of the wealth. If, then, we assume that the nation's income is 5 per cent. of its accumulated wealth, we find that it pays very nearly one-half of its whole income in taxes. Moreover, the taxes here set down are those of 1904 with regard to the Treasury's levies, and those of 1902 with regard to local burdens. But in 1905 there was a still further increase of the former class of taxes because of the war. The Keisai Zasshi says (not "a certain statistician") that another 100 millions should be added on that account, in which case the taxes would aggregate 398½ million yen, being considerably more than one-half of the total revenue."

Since this paragraph was in the article to which my letter replied, (1) Was I wrong when I represented the Mail "as criticising Keisai Zasshi estimates?" (2) Is the Mail right when it says the first question at issue hinges on "aggregate taxes levied by the Central Government and Communes" which are explicitly "limited to 278 millions of yen?" (3) Is it "beside the mark" or increasing the dimensions of the quart measure, when we include all taxes to get the "aggregate" taxes, or do some taxes make up the aggregate?

Into the second question at issue, as defined by the Mail, I shall not again enter. My previous letter sought to show that, when we seek to know the burden or the weight of taxation, we must include all taxes whether direct or indirect. Both writers on finance and the practice in different countries differ greatly concerning the distinction between taxes which are direct and those which are indirect. One country gets much revenue from so-called direct taxes, another country gets little. The United States Government gets absolutely no revenue from what it regards as direct taxes. Hence we get little information about the tax burdens of a people by considering only "direct taxes."

Finally, it seems to me that there were two fundamental questions at issue between the Mail's original article and my previous letter. The first was: How much were the aggregate taxes of the Japanese people as compared with their aggregate income? The second was, what is the sum total of Japan's wealth? I declined to consider the second question further than to point out that the Mail's method of estimating Japan's wealth seemed to me untrustworthy. Concerning the first question, I tried to show that the aggregate taxes—national and local—of Japan, as indicated by the current Budget, must range somewhere about 360 to 398 million yen. I also tried to show that for the family income of 5,000 yen, taxes would probably take a sum ranging from 952 up to 2,240 yen, according to the uses likely to be made of such an income. I tried to show these results by "constructive" methods. The data needed for a trustworthy estimate of Japan's wealth are not in my possession. I have not time now to search for them. I do not think the Mail has given them. In my opinion, the amount of national wealth is much less important, yet much more difficult to estimate, than the weight of taxes.

Honestly to answer the Mail's final question, I do not think that "278 millions of yen represent nearly one-half of the national income." But I do think that nearly 400 million yen of taxes for Japan, under existing conditions, represent an important proportion of the nation's income. I also think that only harm can come from underestimating the nation's taxes or from saying that "they (the people) are not at all inconvenienced by the weight of taxation" words quoted from the Mail's leader, of May 25. If a nation pay in taxes only 5% or so of its income, it may safely undertake experiments and expenditures which would be imprudent and perilous for a nation which pays in taxes several times 5% of its income. Japan must husband her resources with a view to safe-guard her future. Her statesmen and her publicists are wise and prudent in keeping this fact clearly before them. To defend this view was the motive of my first letter, which I therefore regarded as a "dutiful service." It seemed to me that the Mail's view was that of one who in friendly zeal might underestimate the weight of Japan's taxes and thereby encourage the belief that no risk would attach to increasing that weight. Both are possible views for those who feel friendly to Japan. I believe that the Editor of the Mail, as a friend of Japan, of reason and of truth, will see that my view is at least defensible and that my motive in writing on this subject is not that of an idle quibbler.

With apology for the length of my letters and thanks for the space courteously given them, I remain,

Faithfully yours,

E. H. VICKERS.

COCKFIGHTING.

(TO THE EDITOR OF THE "JAPAN MAIL.")

SIR,—Did you ever witness a Cockfight? In my opinion, there can scarcely be found anything more cruel, more barbarous.

Everybody knows that from one end to the other of Japan, cocks are raised for fighting purposes. The poor birds you may see daily in Yokohama and its environs, placed under a "cage," with head, neck, and back horribly mutilated, are but champions that have come out victorious in a fight and brought good gain to their masters and some gamblers. These champions sell high.

Who among the members of the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals, has not met, even here in Yokohama, carriers with small, oblong boxes, in which are enclosed poor birds, but did they ever guess the object in view? Some ten days ago, the writer counted in one walk only 23 of these carriers. They were going to a rendezvous for the fight. Dark figures were following: these were the masters, the gamblers, and to make the show complete, the never failing tea-lady with her baby and her portable mise, closed the procession.

Last Saturday (allow me to say that Yokohama is always the theatre of the facts related, and to specify more, in Negishi,) the gamblers had settled in a certain place. On a gosa, all besmired with fresh blood, 2 of these poor animals, all exhausted, and nearly gaping their last, were seen trying yet in a last effort, while coaxed by the witnesses to attack each other. The sight was horrible, blood was oozing from all over, their heads had become thicker than a large-sized egg, both eyes of one of the combatants had already been plucked out, in short it was a frightful sight. And around this atrocious and barbarous scene, crouched close, their heads nearly touching the combatants, a dozen or so of Japanese were inhaling, sniffing, the fresh blood that was oozing from out of the wounds of the animals and calculating, no doubt, in their minds the profit of this ugly business.

Never had such a heartrending scene been witnessed by the writer, who had now come quite close to the scene of the fight, without attracting in the least the attention of the gamblers, so spellbound were they by their game, and, needless to say he made a rather unexpected and perhaps not too overpolite stop to these proceedings.

And now, if the Police desire to make investigations and to know what is done in public daylight, under their very nose, the writer is perhaps the man who might furnish them with most interesting details, but he is inclined to come off with their everlasting "Shiranai kao."

Respectfully Yours J. N. GUERIN, M.A.

EMPLOYERS AND SERVANTS.

(TO THE EDITOR OF THE "JAPAN MAIL.")

SIR,—In your to-day's paper, under the above heading, "Householder" writes from Tokyo complaining of Japanese servants.

Now, whereas he or she has only had 18 months experience, I have had 7 years and I must say in fairness that I have generally had satisfaction with my servants.

The great fault with some foreigners in Japan is that they do not know how to treat their servants, and naturally an employee will only stay in a house so long as he or she is comfortable and well treated.

There are several houses in Yokohama where good servants will not go—and why should they?—on account of a nagging mistress or something else equally as bad. On the other hand there are many cases known to me where the servants and employers have worked in harmony for years.

If one is fortunate enough to possess a good servant, then one should be prepared to give a good salary. What is a yen or two extra per month against one's comfort and trust in one's servants.

An employer who has a good name will always be able to get good servants at moderate rates, and my experience has taught me that servants will not leave a good situation without sufficient reason.

The whole position is:—That provided householders treat their servants fair and square they will never have cause for complaint.

Trusting that you may find room to insert the above in your newspaper.

I am, Sir, Yours truly, FRED POLLARD.
Yokohama, June 8th, 1906.

(TO THE EDITOR OF THE "JAPAN MAIL.")

SIR,—Permit me a little of your space to reply to the letter of a "Householder" in your issue of June 8th.

I feel exceedingly sorry for Householder in his experiences. I fear he has got amongst a bad class to be so constantly changing, and has won a bad name amongst the servants. In the early part of our residence here, some ten years ago, I too, had some very hard experiences from want of knowing how to manage the people; but, I must say, that I find, when you get good servants and treat them well they are reliable and honest. All have their different tempers and peculiarities, as ourselves, and must be studied. One needs scolding, another reasoning with, and so on. My servants work with great system and I never overlook a fault but speak about it quietly, and it is generally corrected. I lock up all stores; I give out what is required daily. If I am ill or engaged I give the Boy the keys. My cook shows me all he purchases and always weighs the meat, etc., before me. I go into my kitchen, almost every day. Of course I do not find them perfect or finished servants but clean, attentive, honest and sober. No days out or fortnightly holidays as in Australia. They often go to great trouble to decorate the house with flowers to please me on the occasion of our return from a visit or when entertaining.

I have had a great deal of experience of servants in Australia, New Zealand, England, Germany and France and I consider that, on the whole, we are best off here.

I try to identify myself with my servants, care for them in sickness and advise them in any trouble. I expect a full return in attention to their work, to rules of the house. I insist upon it. I consider a careless or lenient mistress makes careless servants. But taking everything into consideration domestic life here is easier than in most countries. Certainly this is not a subject for the consideration of the King's Daughter's Circle. I hope Householder will make a fresh start and if he get, even one good domestic try to understand and keep him and he will, in time, find others.

I have friends, both here and in Tokyo, who like myself, have had many of their domestics for some years and find them trustworthy, careful and honest.

Apologising for troubling you at such length.

I am, yours truly, HOUSEWIFE.
Yokohama, May 9th, 1906.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "JAPAN MAIL."

SIR,—I have fought my servants for 4 years in Japan—I have been unable to get the correct prices of things, and I have kept control of the stores myself, I heartily congratulate you on this step taken in the direction of killing what has become nothing but a boycotting of the employer by his servant. We are not allowed to engage a servant outside a certain circle—though any Japanese will tell you what splendid and faithful servants the Japanese can be—yet are we foreigners never allowed to know any but the band who control the shop prices. Were the shops free agents we should have no trouble. They are not allowed to sell to us at the correct price. A district near a Legation pays higher than other districts because they are forced to. The shops have to sell higher, because the cook leaves them if they do not back him up—it is all a gigantic swindle from start to finish. I wish to place a case of comparative prices before you. A lady lately has been asked to pay yen 100 for her butcher's bill alone for one week—three in the house.

I live well now in my house with all the spring vegetables when they first come, fruit, meat, fish milk, fresh butter daily, eggs, bread, rolls, game and in fact everything, and stores, at £1.00 per head a week, or ten yen per head including everything. And I live giving the price asked by the cook—which he pays. But I see and weigh daily and my pleasure in Japan has suffered greatly in consequence.

I would advise an appeal through the Japanese papers—to the shops and the engagers of servants through a Japanese agency office, where a man's references should be submitted to a Committee—the Committee to be half foreign and half Japanese. I also would advise publicity through the Japanese press.

I have not changed my servants during the four years I have been here, but I have, I hope, changed their views a good deal.

There is no standard of price in Tokyo. In Yokohama there is a recognized printed price list for game and meat—I should advise a daily publications in European and Japanese newspapers (as in Europe) of set market prices to which cooks and shops should be forced to conform by law, then any profit made would be justified. I was charged by my cook 40 sen for a pigeon. I bought one just as good for 30 myself! the same day. I have however, been unable to force my cook to go to a cheap neighbourhood; he would lose prestige in the eyes of the servants' guild if he did—but I pay well. A pound a head in Japan minus entertaining is high pay and yet few of the foreigners reach even that low figure. I write this in the hope of giving help to those worse off than I am. I pay weekly but see the book daily; it is the only way.

A HOUSEHOLDER.
Tokyo, June 12th, 1906.

(TO THE EDITOR OF THE "JAPAN MAIL.")

SIR,—I have not sufficient time to-day to reply to the letter of your correspondent "Fred Pollard," published in your issue of the 9th instant, but would beg to thank "Housewife" for her very pertinent and interesting remarks contained in her letter appearing in your issue of the 12th instant. With your permission, I would on this occasion only give extracts from two letters I have just received on this subject.

The first of these letters is dated from Tokyo, and I quote from same as follows:—"I may say that during my five years' sojourn in this country, I went through the same trials you are describing, dozens of times. The only remedy would be as described in your letter in the Japan Mail of the 8th instant. I am, however, afraid that no concerted action will be arrived by foreigners, owing to the fact that there are so many who do not want to be bothered with the servants, and let same do according to their own sweet will. I shall be most agreeably disappointed if I prove mistaken. In spite of my pessimism, I am however, quite prepared to co-operate with you in your scheme."

The second letter is from a Yokohama resident, and he writes as follows:—"I am quite willing to come into any union of householders, as I think with you that we ought to try to protect ourselves against this "Kumiai" of servants getting worse every day." These gentlemen are in accord with the suggestion that no servant should be employed who cannot produce a satisfactory testimonial and also the suggestion as to deferring part of the wages and paying it under the same conditions as Japanese business houses pay bonuses to their employees.

Since writing the above I have received several letters from foreign gentlemen offering to co-operate with me in endeavoring to form a union, and have also received verbal offers, but I await further offers and further ventilation of the question. The time for foreigners to go to the various summer resorts is approaching and there will be a demand for domestic servants, which will give some unpleasant experiences to those householders who may perhaps up to now have had none.

Yours faithfully, HOUSEHOLDER.
Tokyo, 13th June, 1906.

THE INTER-TOWN TENNIS MATCHES.

(TO THE EDITOR OF THE "JAPAN MAIL.")

SIR,—With reference to the Inter-town Lawn Tennis matches recently played, may I ask under whose auspices the games have been arranged, as far as the Yokohama players are concerned? If any Yokohama residents are eligible to be chosen, surely an advertisement should have been inserted in the local papers or some public notice given that the matches would be played, so as to enable intending contestants to send in their names, and the best players to be chosen either by a selection committee, or by playing against each other, while on the other hand, if only members of the Bluff Gardens Tennis Club are eligible is not the title "Inter-town" tennis somewhat a misnomer?

I am, &c. ENQUIRER.

(TO THE EDITOR OF THE "JAPAN MAIL.")

SIR,—Referring to the letter of "Enquirer" in your issue of to-day with regard to the Intertown Tennis Matches, he can consider the title "Inter-town" a misnomer with possibly some justification, but then the following fixtures are also all misnomers, the annual matches versus Kobe at Cricket, Football and Baseball, also the Rowing and Sailing contests, which are known as "Interport."

I think the Ladies Lawn Tennis and Croquet Club may be considered headquarters for Tennis, but no doubt if there were any superior players known of outside the said Club they would probably be asked to play and it will no doubt interest "Enquirer" to know that last season one of the players for Yokohama in the Tennis Matches against Tokyo was not a member of the L.L.T. & C. Club.

Yours faithfully, "PLAYER."

TELEGRAMS.

(REUTER'S SPECIAL SERVICE.)

THE SPANISH WEDDING.

London, June 7.

The Prince and Princess of Wales have left Madrid. King Alfonso and Queen Ena bade them a most cordial farewell at the station.

THE BOMB OUTRAGE.

The Republican editor Nakins has been arrested in Madrid. He admitted having sheltered the perpetrator of the outrage after the throwing of the bomb.

KING EDWARD AND JAPANESE OFFICERS.

Twenty naval officers lunched with the King and Queen at Windsor and afterwards inspected the Castle.

THE MEAT-PACKING SCANDAL.

Later.
It is reported from Washington that Mr. Wilson, on behalf of the Chicago meat packers, gave evidence before the House Committee on Agriculture, in which he denied the allegations made against the trade.

THE DUMA.

No symptoms of conciliation are perceptible between the Government and the Duma, which sits for long hours daily discussing the misdemeanours of officialdom and propounding vast projects of reform. Minister Gourko was yesterday hooted down by peasants at Pekay.

SIR EDWARD CLARKE RESIGNS.

London, June 8.
Sir Edward Clarke has resigned his seat in the House of Commons.

A FAST CUNARDER.

The twenty-five knot Cunard turbine steamer Lusitania has been launched on the Clyde. She is the largest and fastest vessel in the world. Her tonnage is 32,500.

THE TRIPLE ALLIANCE.

The Emperors William and Francis Joseph have exchanged cordial telegrams with the King of Italy expressing unalterable friendship.

THE JACQUERIE IN RUSSIA.

London, June 8.
The peasant revolution is rapidly spreading in Russia, especially in the north-western districts, where the peasants are burning estates. Organized resistance to the military is general.

THE TRIPLE ALLIANCE.

The German official press is jubilant at the exchange of telegrams, as indicating the solidity of the Triple Alliance, but non-officials are doubtful as to the sincerity of Italy.

THE TINNED MEAT SCANDALS: CHARGES AND RECRIMINATIONS.

In consequence of the Chicago revelations, the British military authorities are thoroughly overhauling the stocks of meat in the garrisons and in the Woolwich dockyard.

Later.

Packer Wilson, being re-examined, said that Chicago's foreign meat-trade was diminished by half, and that, if this diminution continued, it would be a terrible calamity for the West, whence the stock was drawn.

Mr. Armour being interviewed at Paris, said that the revelations were engineered by President Roosevelt, who bears a personal spite to the packers.

GRAVE STATEMENT IN HOUSE OF COMMONS.

In the British House of Commons, the Rt. Hon. Mr. Haldane, Secretary for War, said that he was unable to promise to suspend the purchase of American tinned meat, for the Army has a large quantity bought and had also a large contract for further supply. He further said that the War Office has sent out the most expert officer to inspect meat before and during its manufacture and that the same thing is done with all tinned goods. He said, however, that the expert had wide powers under contracts. Mr. Haldane reminded the House of the question of the purity of home products raised in the past, and said he knew personally of the disgusting conditions of packing in the United States.

THE NATAL REBELLION.

London, June 9.
The idea is gaining ground in Natal that the employment of Imperial troops is necessary owing to the wider ramifications of the rebellion. Great disquietude exists among the whites in Zululand. Colonel Mackenzie's prolonged drives in the bush are greatly exhausting his men.

"KATORI" AND "KASHIMA" LEAVE.

The Japanese battleships Katori and Kashima have left Portsmouth, bound home.

CHINESE IN SOUTH AFRICA.

In the course of a debate in the House of Commons Mr. Winston Churchill admitted the fact that there being only twelve applicants for repatriation showed that there was no general desire on the part of the Chinese on the Rand to return home and that it justified the perpetuation of the system.

AMERICAN MEAT PACKING.

Later.

President Roosevelt has forwarded to Congress the Agricultural Committee's report on meat packing, which confirms Neill's report.

THE EDUCATION BILL.

Ten thousand Lancashire churchmen went in procession to the Albert Hall in unique demonstration against the Education Bill. The streets were lined with cheering thousands; the hall was packed and the most intense enthusiasm prevailed.

BRITISH POLITICS.

Mr. Winston Churchill, in his speech in connexion with the Labour motion on the Colonial Office vote to reduce Lord Elgin's salary, out-talked the available time. Had a division been taken it is probable that the Government majority would have sunk to the lowest owing to the indignation of the Radicals against the Chinese labour policy.

THE NAVAL MANŒUVRES.

A number of army officers will participate in the naval manœuvres which begin to day, following the Japanese model.

DINIZULU.

London, June 10.

Dinizulu expressed a wish to come to Pietermaritzburg to interview the Governor, but owing to ill-health he has sent a trusted Induna.

The Government has accepted the Induna's communication and the offer of a bearer company.

THE GRAND PRIX.

London, June 11.

The result of the Grand Prix is:—

Spearhead .....	1
Briseoeur .....	2
Storm .....	3

THE TRIPLE ALLIANCE.

The Emperor Franz Joseph, receiving the Austro-Hungarian delegations, referred to the German Alliance, which, owing to its defensive character, was a valuable guarantee for peace. The visit of the Kaiser Wilhelm to Vienna again placed on record their intimate friendly relations, which were equally trustful each with the other and all with Italy.

ENGLAND AND SERBIA.

As a result of the retirement of the regicides, Great Britain has agreed to the appointment of a Servian Minister to London.

AUSTRO-HUNGARIAN TROUBLES.

London, June 12.

In Vienna a mob consisting of 20,000 Clericals and anti-Semites, headed by the anti-Semite burgomaster Lueger, made a violent anti-Hungarian demonstration outside the Hungarian delegations' building, smashing the windows. The Austrian premier called on the Hungarian premier and expressed regret.

THE NATAL OUTBREAK.

Colonel Mackenzie partly succeeded in surrounding the rebels in the Mome valley. An important chief named Mehloka Zulu and 350 others were killed; a captain in the Transvaal contingent and an officer in the Natal force were killed and eight whites were wounded. There are now 5,400 whites in the field in Natal and the Government is raising 200 more in Natal and 500 in Capetown.

DEATH OF MR. R. J. SEDDON.

The death is announced of the Rt. Hon. R. J. Seddon, Premier of New Zealand.

[New Zealand loses in "Dick Seddon," at the age of 61, a man who has played a prominent part in her affairs. His career is summed up tersely in Who's Who:—Premier, Colonial Treasurer, Minister of Labour, Minister of Defence, Minister of Education, and Minister for Immigration in New Zealand; b. Eccleston, Lancashire, 1845; emigrated to Melbourne, 1863; s. of late Thomas Seddon and Jane Lindsay; m. 1869, Louisa Jane, d. of Captain John Spotswood; three s. six d. Educ.: Eccleston Hill School, Lancs. Removed to New Zealand; entered New Zealand Parliament, 1879; a mechanical engineer; Assoc. American Institute of Mining Engineers; hon. life member Geographical Society of California; Hon. LL.D.-Camb. and Edin. Universities; attended conference Colonial Premiers in London, 1897, and also in 1902.]

NAVAL AND MILITARY MATTERS.

The London Telegraph states that the Government has decided to abandon one of the two Dreadnoughts to be commenced this year according to the programme inherited from their predecessors.

The Navy Estimates for 1907 show a further decrease.

The Standard says that Mr. Haldane has decided to eliminate ten thousand inefficient from the infantry, to reduce the Royal Artillery by 48 batteries and to increase the auxiliary (machine gun) batteries.

A GERMAN DISASTER.

London, June 12.

The Germans lost two officers and eight troopers killed and ten wounded in a recent routing of 250 Hottentots.

THE LATE MR. SEDDON.

At Home and in the Colonies the death of Mr. Seddon has everywhere evoked the warmest tributes of deep regret at the Empire's great loss.

FEAR OF ANARCHISTS.

London, June 12.

A service for the beatification of a Spanish saint at St. Peter's, Rome, on Sunday was most sparsely attended, although many thousands had been invited, owing to a report, apparently well accredited, that some French anarchists are plotting a bomb outrage upon the Pope. Extraordinary police precautions were taken.

RUSSIAN REGIMENT MUTINIES.

A regiment at Pultava in Russia mutinied and paraded the streets singing and with the band playing. The general commanding has conceded the men's demands.

MR. SEDDON'S DEATH.

Later.

King Edward has telegraphed to Lord Plunket, K.C.V.O., Governor of New Zealand, his deep regret at the death of Mr. Seddon, whose long, loyal and distinguished services will secure him a permanent place among statesmen who have most zealously fostered the sentiment of kinship upon which the unity of the empire depends. Lord Elgin, Colonial Secretary, telegraphed to Lord Plunket the Government's regret and sympathy.

INSURANCE MEN INDICTED.

Gillette and Grannis, former Vice-Presidents of the New York Mutual Life, have been indicted in New York for forgery.

H.M.S. "MONTAGU."

London, June 13.

Mr. Robertson, Civil Lord of the Admiralty, speaking in the House of Commons, said he hoped to save H.M.S. Montagu if the weather continues fine.

ST. MICHAEL AND ST. GEORGE'S CHAPEL.

Amid a scene of great military and heraldic pomp and with impressive religious ceremonial the south-west chapel of St. Paul's Cathedral has been dedicated for the use of the Order of St. Michael and St. George, in the presence of King Edward, the Prince of Wales, and members of the Order.

THE CHINESE CUSTOMS.

Sir Edward Grey says the Government regards the Waiwupu's answer concerning the Chinese Maritime Customs as not satisfactory.

FRENCH DOMESTIC AND FOREIGN POLICY.

London, June 13.

Speaking in the French Chamber, M. Sarrien made a statement concerning the Government's policy. He announced a general amnesty, the imposition of an income tax; reform of courts martial; Government employees to be allowed to form Unions, but not allowed to go on strike. The Government will strengthen its present alliances and friendships and its foreign policy will continue on lines based upon justice and peace, trusting thus to help convince the nations of the possibility of effecting a reduction in armaments.

THE NATAL REBELLION.

Later.

Hitherto 575 rebels have been killed in Natal. Col. Mackenzie considers that the spread of the rebellion has been checked.

BRITISH POLITICS.

The discussion in the Committee stage of the Education Bill has been postponed for one week pending a scheme for closing, which the Cabinet is considering.

LAND FOR RUSSIAN PEASANTS.

London, June 14.

In view of the growing agitation among the peasants the Russian Government is preparing to form great land reserves of about fifty-four million acres in Abereon on which to settle landless peasants.

IRISH LAND STOCK.

Seven million pounds sterling of 2½ per cent. Irish land stock has been issued at 89.

(By Special Arrangement with the "ASAHI SHIMBUN.")

GERMAN UNREST.

London, June 11.

There is much uneasiness in Berlin and dissatisfaction with the Government's foreign policy. Many newspapers are expressing discontent. The organ of the great Westphalian industrialists has been raided for contemptuous references to the Triple Alliance.

RUSSIAN NEWS.

London, June 12.

In St. Petersburg there are persistent rumours that the intention to form a Parliamentary administration has been finally abandoned.

The troops are disaffected and the fortresses are full of military suspects.

FRANCE AND HER FINANCES.

London, June 13.

In Paris a ministerial statement has been made emphasizing the necessity of restoring the budgetary equilibrium. The Government will maintain and strengthen the Russian alliance and the friendship with Great Britain, which is precious.

BAD COMPLEXIONS

Dry Thin and Falling Hair and Red Rough Hands Prevented by

CUTICURA SOAP

MILLIONS use CUTICURA SOAP, assisted by CUTICURA OINTMENT, for preserving, purifying, and beautifying the skin, for cleansing the scalp of crusts, scales, and dandruff, and the stopping of falling hair, for softening, whitening, and soothing red, rough, and sore hands, for baby rashes, itchings, and chafings, in the form of baths for annoying irritations and inflammations, or too free or offensive perspiration, in the form of washes, for ulcerative weaknesses, and for many sanative, antiseptic, cleansing purposes which readily suggest themselves to women, especially mothers, and for all the purposes of the toilet, bath, and nursery. CUTICURA SOAP combines delicate emollient properties derived from CUTICURA OINTMENT, the great skin cure, with the purest of cleansing ingredients and the most refreshing of flower odours. No other medicated soap is to be compared with it for preserving, purifying, and beautifying the skin, scalp, hair, and hands. No other foreign or domestic toilet soap, however expensive, is to be compared with it for all the purposes of the toilet, bath, and nursery. Thus it combines in ONE SOAP at ONE PRICE, the BEST skin and complexion soap, and the BEST toilet and baby soap in the world.

COMPLETE EXTERNAL AND INTERNAL TREATMENT FOR EVERY HUMOUR,

Consisting of CUTICURA SOAP, to cleanse the skin of crusts and scales, and soften the thickened cuticle; CUTICURA OINTMENT, to instantly allay itching, inflammation, and irritation, and soothe and heal; and CUTICURA RESOLVENT PILLS, to cool and cleanse the blood. A SINGLE SET is often sufficient to cure torturing, disfiguring humours, eczemas, rashes, and irritations, with loss of hair, when all else fails. Sold throughout the world. Australian Depot: R. TOWNS & CO., Sydney. British Depot: 27-28, Charterhouse Sq., London. French Depot: 5 Rue de la Paix, Paris. POTTER DRUG AND CHEM. CO., Sole Props., Boston, U. S. A.

CUTICURA RESOLVENT PILLS (Chocolate Coated) are a new, tasteless, odourless, economical substitute for the celebrated liquid CUTICURA RESOLVENT, as well as for all other blood purifiers and humour cures. Put up in screw-cap pocket vials, containing 60 doses. CUTICURA PILLS are alterative, antiseptic, tonic, and digestive, and beyond question the purest, sweetest, most successful and economical blood and skin purifiers, humour cures, and tonic-digestives, yet compounded.

ACCORDING to a telegram from the Japanese Consul at San Francisco, a dispute has taken place between the Seamen's Union and all the shipowners. The men employed at the wharves and piers in landing and shipping cargo have struck. Consequently steamer traffic in the harbour is delayed. Ships for the Orient have had their departures postponed.

THE Osaka Shosen Kaisha intends to add four steamers to the present service between Osaka and Dairen. The Jiji's Osaka correspondent says that this seems to indicate competition with the Nippon Yusen Kaisha.

ON the night of June 13th, fire broke out in South Gojo, Sapporo, destroying twenty-five houses. One man was killed. The same night, another fire occurred at Iwauchi-cho, in the same district. Fifty-two buildings were burned down.

ACCORDING to a report by the Department of Agriculture and Commerce, the sericultural industry this year is expected to be better than that of previous years, with the exception of Gumma, Nagano, and the northeastern prefectures.

MR. KAWAKAMI, Japanese Commercial Agent at Vladivostock, has wired to the Foreign Office that the Russian harbour authorities request all ships arriving at that port to employ a pilot and not to enter at night owing to the danger of floating mines.

AN official telegram says that Colonel Oshima and his staff, commissioned to delimit the boundaries of north and south Sughalien arrived at Alexandrofsky on June 14th. They met the Russian delegates the following day. The negotiations are now going on.

MR. J. G. LAY, American Consul at Canton, has been transferred to Capetown; Mr. Fisher, Consul in Formosa, to Harbin, and Mr. W. T. Fee, Consul at Bombay, to Mukden. Mr. Hayward has been appointed Consul in Korea and Mr. Belgortz Consul at Canton.

PRINCE NASHIMOTO (a Captain of the Army) will leave Tokyo at the beginning of August for France to complete his military studies. Lieut.-Colonel G. Ando, and several other officers will accompany him. His Highness was studying in France before the outbreak of the war.

THE Jiji reports that the Formosan Government will issue a lottery amounting to half a million yen this year and will profit about yen 120,000 over the transaction. Next year, the Government intends to issue lotteries aggregating five million yen and from them to realize a profit of yen 1,250,000.

MR. WARD, Vice-President of the Pacific Telegraph Company in the United States, will shortly arrive in Japan. His object is reported to be the transaction of some telegraphic business with the Japanese Department of Communications as direct service between the two countries will be opened in the near future.

THE advance of thirty million yen to the Finance Department by the Bank of Japan will be redeemed on June 25th. The Jiji says that the Treasury intends to incur a further loan to replace the foregoing amount. The new debt will be repaid at the end of September. Interest will be probably be yen 1.5 per day.

THE proposed Osaka City loan, which was under negotiation between the city authorities and the Industrial Bank and several foreign capitalists, is reported by the Nichi Nichi to have been almost settled. The money will be raised in a foreign country through the Japanese bank. The amount is about thirty-five million yen or a little more, instead of fifty million yen as was previously reported. The rate of interest is believed to be 5½ per cent. There is no report with regard to the price of issue.

KOREA.

Saturday, June 16.

The Chuo Shimbun's translation of a Seoul journal's revelations makes very interesting reading. We learn, that the whole of the disturbances now going on in Korea are the work of the Imperial Court, and that their purpose is to secure the intervention of foreign Powers by creating an impression that the entire Korean nation is bitterly averse to the Japanese protectorate. The programme arranged was that the renowned scholar Kim Hseung-mun should head an insurrection in the north, and that Choi Ik-hyon, who holds the second rank of the second grade and is an old literatus second to him only in renown, should perform a like part in the south. Choi appears to have been first approached by the Imperial emissaries, but he showed much reluctance to take the field, being persuaded of the infeasibility of the enterprise. Min Chyon-sik was then consulted. He readily acquiesced and by his efforts the insurrection which involved a Japanese attack on Hongju and the killing of many of his countrymen, was fomented. Choi Ik-hyon, seeing that no difficulty existed in stirring up the people, now came upon the stage, but only to fall into the hands of the Japanese. It is stated that, when captured, the old man did not know of the catastrophe which had taken place at Hongju. Kim Hseung-mun does not appear to have hesitated at all, but his part of the enterprise never matured. He was taken into the Court's councils and he received the Imperial commission to levy horse and foot in the cause entrusted to him, but just when these arrangements had been consummated, he fell into the hands of the police as he was emerging from the Palace on the night of the 8th instant. One feature of the plot was to place the control of the Cabinet under a newly appointed Gisei Daijin, and another old and much respected statesman, Min Yong-kyu, was with difficulty persuaded to accept the post. Our readers know how this attempt resulted, and how the newly appointed official had to change his title to Kenrei Daijin, becoming thus a mere officer of ceremonies. The two leaders being now in custody, and the whole plan being exposed, it may be hoped that the trouble will soon come to an end. Min Chyon-sik, however, seems to be still at large. The arrest of a man resembling him was recently wired, but as there has not been any confirmation of the rumour we presume that it was ill-founded.

Assuming the truth of the above story—for which, of course, we can not vouch in any way—it is evident that the great problem confronting Marquis Ito is how to deal with the Korean Court. The Emperor made a special request that the Convention of last November—the much talked of convention—should contain a clause guaranteeing the security of the Imperial Household, and ever since that time his Majesty appears to have been plotting assiduously against the Japanese. Whether he is blameworthy or not we refrain from discussing. The point is what is to be done with him? Obviously the farce of pretending to believe his expressions of good-will and of acquiescence in the new regime can not be perpetually maintained. The Japanese will become ridiculous in the eyes of the world, to say nothing of the impossibility of achieving the task they have set for themselves in Korea, if they continue to place a semblance of trust in such a sovereign and to leave him in possession of competence to disturb the peace. This, the really crucial phase of the matter, is not discussed by leading Tokyo journals. The Jiji Shimpō, for example, confines itself to urging that Japanese troops should be immediately employed to quell these disturbances, and that reliance should not be placed any longer on Korean police or soldiers. There is some talk of an important message having been conveyed from the Throne to Marquis Ito by Prince Iwakura, but this is altogether vague, and has probably no connexion with the date of the Resident General's departure for Seoul, which is now said to have been fixed for the 20th instant.

Monday, June 18.

There has been another raid of insurgents against the Japanese fishing station at Kangneung on the coast of the Sea of Japan, and a body of gendarmes have been sent out from Gensan with all haste.

Two pirates' boats have appeared in Kunsan Bay (Chhollado) and the Japanese fishermen, some 50 in number, who were carrying on their industry in that region, have been compelled to withdraw temporarily.

It has been decided to station detachments of Japanese troops in Hongju and Kongju. Since the capture of Choi Ik-hyon the insurgents who had assembled at the latter place have dispersed and good order has been restored.

The Emperor of Korea has issued a proclamation ordering the Wi Pyon to dissolve. His Majesty speaks of this association as including within its ranks many men of education, which fact makes it more surprising that such mistaken courses should be pursued. The Wi Pyon are loyal soldiers in their own eyes. That is the signification of the term. If the tortuous line of policy which the Emperor himself appears to be pursuing is not greatly misrepresented, such a proclamation as the above must perplex his subjects.

The ninety men who are still held in custody from among the prisoners taken at Honju, have been frequently examined since their arrival in Seoul. Several of them are reported to be well educated men. They claim to be patriots who acted in the cause of their country, but they observe strict silence with regard to their connexion with the insurgents, and as yet no information has been elicited as to the proximate origin of the disturbance. Some of them are disposed to starve themselves rather than to receive food from their Japanese jailors. Among them are a few wounded men who are duly tended by Japanese surgeons.

The Nioku states that Mr. Kim Hseung-mun has confessed his connexion with the insurgents, but that as he and Mr. Choi Ik-hyon have always stood high in Court esteem, strenuous efforts are being made by their friends to obtain their release.

In the Jiji Shimpō we find an article which hints very plainly that the source of all these troubles is to be sought in high places. Our contemporary urges that while nothing can be easier than to deal with local insurrections as they arise, that kind of temporizing policy can never be effective so long as the origin of the mischief is left intact. It is more than probable that if the matter be probed to the bottom, unlooked for developments may be disclosed. But that contingency is not to be shrunk from. The Resident General may naturally hesitate to adopt extreme measures, yet he has to remember that if these are likely to provoke commotion and comment at the moment among foreign observers, feeble hesitation to deal duly with an obvious crisis will have the effect of discrediting Japan's competence in the eyes of the world, and if her competence be seriously impugned, so will her title to retain the protectorate of Korea. In our issue of the 16th instant we alluded very plainly to this phase of the complication, and expressed surprise that it had not been noticed by leading Japanese journals. By a curious coincidence, while we were penning that very comment, the editor of the Jiji Shimpō's foreign department must have been writing the article alluded to above, for it appears in the issue that went to press simultaneously with our own columns. Japan is very fortunate in having a statesman of Marquis Ito's calibre to steer her through these dangerous passages of her career.

The Chinese Government, according to telegrams in the Asahi and the Jiji, has intimated that the capital necessary for the lumber industry in the Yalu Valley has been subscribed, and has requested that responsible persons shall be sent from Japan to discuss the details of the company. This notice is based on the 10th Article of the last treaty between China and Japan which runs thus:—"The Imperial Chinese Government agree that a joint stock company of forestry composed of Japanese and Chinese capitalists shall be organized for the exploitation of the forests in the regions on the right bank of the Yalu River, and that a detailed agreement shall be concluded in which the area and the term of the concession as well as the organization of the company and all regulations concerning the joint work of exploitation shall be provided for. The Japanese and Chinese shareholders shall share equally in the profits of the undertaking." The Chinese Government has shown considerable alacrity in this matter. The evident meaning of the Treaty is that each of the contracting parties shall put up an equal sum of capital, but we have not yet heard anything of Japan's arrangements to raise her share. It is understood that the railway question occupied official attention to the exclusion of other topics and that the forestry problem is now in hand. China asks that the felling of timber shall cease in the region concerned pending the determination of detailed rules for the new company.

The investigations connected with the bridging of the Yalu are now practically completed and the work of building will be very soon commenced, it is expected. The Hochi says that the span is 3,400 feet, being thus nearly the same as that of the railway bridge over the Oi-gawa in Japan. There will be forty pillars and the height of the structure above the water level will be 40 feet, so that junks in full sail will be able to pass underneath. The material will be iron. Naturally the establishment of this first direct connexion between the northern and the southern banks of Yalu is viewed with keen interest.

Tuesday, June 19.

On the 15th instant the Japanese gendarmes arrested Mr. Li Pong-rai, Vice-Minister of Home Affairs in Korea, and Mr. Min Kyong-sik, Vice-Minister of the Imperial Household. These two officials are charged with fomenting the insurrection in the provinces. Still more important is a statement which comes from more than one source that in the possession of Choi Ik-hyon, whose apprehension has already been announced, there was found a secret decree of the Emperor countenancing the disturbance. The Sovereign does not appear to have limited his encouragement to the issue of an edict; he also caused money and munitions to be sent to the insurgents. Many of our readers are probably cognizant of the ancient custom of the Orient in these matters. If a party of rebels could only obtain a decree from the monarch or from a member of the reigning house, they ceased to be rebels and became imperial troops. There are many instances of this in Japanese history and a repetition of the custom in Korea's case is not surprising.

The Chuo Shimbun gives a detailed account of the doings of Kim Hseungmun, but the main outlines do not differ from those already stated in these columns. It appears that Kim, on account of his great scholarship and his character, enjoyed the right of entree to the Palace at all times and without any preliminary formalities. He occupied a position very similar to that held by the celebrated Okubo Hikozaemon in the days of the Third Tokugawa Shogun. Kim conceived the idea, or adopted it when suggested by others, that the only hope for Korea lay in interesting Russia to raise her hand once more against Japan. In order to effect this he and his fellow-thinkers imagined that the best method of inception would be to engage Russia in a plan to expel the Chinese from the island of Hando, and thereafter, having established intimate relations with the great Northern Power, to induce it to employ a force of 300,000 men for the purpose of driving the Japanese also from Korea. It was all very crude, but Korea's notion of the way to conduct foreign politics has always been crude. The Emperor became a willing convert to the views of these conspirators, namely, Kim Hseungmun and his two coadjutors Li Ponyun and Choi Chonghyon. His Majesty gave them three documents bearing the vermilion seal. One was an order on the Treasury for 100,000 yen, to be employed for the purpose of re-establishing Korean sway on the island of Hando—it may be added that Mr. Kim's learned researches had revealed this island as the birth-place of the Li dynasty—; another, a commission (the well known bakai of Japanese history) empowering him to levy men, horses and provisions for the purposes of the enterprise; and the third a commission conferring autocratic authority in everything that related to the administration of the island. Mr. Kim appears to have failed to secure secrecy in carrying out the preliminaries of the programme. At the very moment when they were completed, he was arrested as he emerged from the Palace on the night of the 8th, at once taken to the police station, his house being searched, with the result that the above incriminating documents were found. The information leading to the arrest is said to have been furnished by the Il Ching-hoi. Such is, in brief, the account given by the Chuo Shimbun, whose editor should be well acquainted with the facts. No one will be prepared to deny that the Emperor of Korea and his loyal subjects are warranted in endeavouring to maintain their country's freedom if they believe it to be menaced. But neither will any one deny that Japan can not tamely consent to have dust thrown into her eyes by a sovereign who, while concluding treaties with her in a certain sense and professing a sincere intention of carrying them out, engages secretly in intrigues to restore the influence of a foreign Power whose elimination from this part of Asia is a necessity of Japan's existence and to eliminate whom she has just fought a terrible war. The Korean Emperor and his subjects are not fighting for freedom when they engage in plots like that of Kim Hseungmun: they are manœuvring simply to exchange the Japanese King Log for the Russian King Stork. We do not gather that there is any evidence of the Russian Government having lent its approval to this affair. But Min Yong-ik, who has lately been in Shanghai where he conferred with M. Pavlov, has now gone to Vladivostok, as has also the Russian ex-Minister of Supreme-Court fame. Very likely these gentlemen are working off their own bats, counting to obtain St. Petersburg's endorsement in the event of success.

The Korean pirates, alluded to frequently of late, appear to be somewhat formidable. They are said to possess boats capable of holding 40 men, and they are harassing the southern and eastern coasts. These men show a systemized hostility to Japanese fishermen, and it is suspected that they are in league with the Hongju insurgents.

It is stated by Tokyo journals that the question of the Yalu Timber Company, as outlined in the last China-Japan Treaty, was taken up by China in March, when Viceroy Yuan submitted to Tokyo a scheme for an international association with a capital of a 2 million yen, one half put up by Chinese subjects, the other half by Japanese. The Japanese Authorities were too much occupied by other business to take the matter immediately in hand, but they have now done so, and doubtless the Viceroy's plan will be adopted in the main. It is alleged that the draft scheme is now in the hands of the Privy Council.

Wednesday, June 20.

Other arrests have been made in Korea. In addition to the Vice-Ministers of the Household and of Home Affairs, Messrs. Min Kyongsik and Li Pong-rai, the apprehension is now announced. Of Mr. Pak Yongho, member of the Privy Council, Major-General Min Pyonghwan, of the War Department, and others. Mr. Kim Hseungmun has already been handed over to the Japanese gendarmes and Mr. Choi Ik-hyon is being sent to Seoul for the same purpose. We do not understand how it happens that these transfers to Japanese jurisdiction are made, but presumably some explanation will be forthcoming. It is expected that the examination of these leaders will lead to important disclosures. They are all men of influence at Court, and it is suspected that they furnished supplies of money to the insurgents, this charge being preferred especially against Mr. Pak Yongho whose duties are connected with the Treasury of the Household. In the Fiji Shimpō's telegraphic correspondence it is stated that the arrests total 130, and that all those apprehended have been examined with more or less incriminating results.

The Fiji Shimpō has a leading article on the subject of these arrests. It contends that vigorous measures must be adopted without delay. The question of the Emperor's complicity may not be clear, but it is quite clear that those nearest to the Throne are concerned in the insurrection and that the Korean Authorities, assuming them to be not in sympathy with the insurgents, must be quite incompetent to preserve peace and good order. Any hesitation on Japan's part in the face of such circumstances will expose her in turn to accusations of incompetence. She has to cut off the root of the trouble unless she is willing that the world should judge her strength to be inadequate for the task she has undertaken.

The Asahi Shimbun, however, takes a somewhat different view. It does not deny that the Throne may be found to have been implicated in the disturbance, but it is disposed to infer that if the Sovereign's secret commands have such influence, it will be well to recognise the fact and to preserve the Throne as a useful instrument of government, merely taking care that the Ministers by whom the Sovereign is advised are really men of integrity. Nothing would be easier than to cancel the article of the November Convention which pledges Japan to uphold the dignity and safety of the Imperial House. Such a pledge would cease to have any validity were the Court convicted of secretly stirring up the people against the giver of the pledge. But by extreme measures of that kind Japan would not be consulting her own interests. She must utilize the Throne. Evidently its power is still considerable. Neither must she be at all dismayed by these symptoms of disturbance and disaffection. They are the common accompaniment of similar conditions whatever country may have assumed the duty of tutelage. One thing, however, does evidently cause the Asahi some easiness: it is that, as our contemporary expresses it, these vermilion-seal commissions may be flying beyond the limits of the Eight Provinces, and may have already come into the hands of foreign States. With that phase of the complication, however, the Empire's diplomatists may be trusted to deal.

Two Korean subjects convicted of having sold land to Japanese subjects outside the settlements, have been arrested and will be punished.

Thursday, June 21.

The examination of Messrs. Kim, Min, Pak and Li is proceeding with the utmost care in Seoul, and frequent arrests are reported in consequence of the information elicited from the prisoners. Among those apprehended is Min Yang-hwi, chief local official of Haimi, against whom clear evidence has been found that he furnished the rebel leader, Min Chyong-sik, with money and munitions. Incidentally it is mentioned that Cho Ik-hyon has been handed over to the Japanese gendarmes for trial, and that a similar course will be pursued in the case of the other prisoners, but on what grounds this change of normal jurisdiction has been made none of the correspondents has yet mentioned.

The examination of the 81 Hongju prisoners was concluded on the 18th instant. Two were released, having established their character as respectable citizens, and one died in prison, so that there remain 78, against whom a prima facie case has been made out. They will be tried by court martial, it is alleged.

It will be remembered that some time ago an envoy was sent by the Emperor to warn the Hongju insurgents and induce them to disperse peacefully. If the Sovereign be really implicated in the insurrection and if, as is charged, his Majesty furnished supplies of money and issued legalizing commissions, his action in sending this envoy shows a degree of duplicity not easy to fathom. It may be, however, that the Court is divided and that what one party does, the other disapproves. At any rate the envoy, Yun Chi-yong, seems to have set little store by the alleged object of his mission, for he compiled a report highly favourable to the insurgents, and this having come to light, he has been deprived of his office. It must be a stupendous task for the Residency-General to steer a sound course among such tergiversations, intrigues and deceptions.

Another disturbance is reported from Kangwondo. The exact locality is the mountain called Tai-Paik-san, about 7 miles north of Andong. A body of 100 insurgents are said to have taken the field there.

Field-Marshal Count Nozu and Admiral Viscount Ito had a long audience of the Emperor of Korea on the 18th instant. His Majesty is said to have warmly complimented the two officers on the services rendered by them to their country, and the audience is described as having had considerable import, but beyond that vague statement nothing is stated.

It is reported that the Korean Court has nominated another Gisei Daijin in the person of Mr. Cho Pyong-ho. A few days ago the appointment of Mr. Min Yong-kyu to this important office—the highest below the Throne—created some commotion as the nomination had been made without consulting the Residency-General. The latter protested strenuously, and the Korean Court was understood to have acquiesced in the justice of the protest by changing the title of Gisei Daijin to that of Tenrei Daijin, which is a purely sumptuary term. But now suddenly we hear of another Gisei Daijin being appointed, and the Court is credited with having replied in the old sense to the remonstrances of the Residency General, namely, that the nomination is in connexion solely with the marriage ceremonial of the Prince Imperial. Such intelligence causes one to suspect that some error of correspondence is responsible, for that is an explanation much easier than to imagine the Korean Court guilty of these frivolous pettinesses.

One result of Field Marshal Nozu's visit to Seoul is said to have been an arrangement concluded by him with Mr. Li Keun-thaik, Minister of War, for the employment of ten Japanese officers to train the Korean Guards and the local forces.

The Jiji Shimpō has another leading article on the subject of Japan's relations with Korea; an article which makes our contemporary's previous utterances easier to comprehend. At first the Jiji wrote in a strain capable of being interpreted to mean that if the Throne were found to be implicated directly in this insurrection, the Japanese should not shrink from the consequences of such a discovery, language which appeared to imply that even the dethronement of the sovereign should be boldly faced as a possible contingency. On the other hand, the Asahi Shimbun, as explained in these columns, advised the preservation of the Throne as an evidently potential instrument of government. The Jiji now makes it quite clear that in advocating thorough investigation and resolute action, it does not contemplate anything like dethronement. What is wanted is simply to clear away the mischievous intriguers who now surround the Throne, and to differentiate the Court and the Administration by lines unmistakably defined. No one should have access to the Court except through duly authorized channels, and Imperial decrees should wholly cease to be competent bases for any executive procedure. So far as things have gone it is beyond question that the Court officials have fostered, if not actually fomented, the disturbances now troubling the Empire, and history shows clearly that the intrigues of these same officials are responsible for the two foreign wars in which Japan has engaged. In the face of such records it would be suicidal to abandon the Throne any longer to the operation of such pernicious influences or to leave in the hands of the intriguers a weapon so dangerous as an imperial decree. Thus the gist of the Jiji's writing is that, while carefully protecting the Throne, its entourage should be unmercifully weeded out, and the relation between the Court and the Administration should be finally severed. If the Japanese officials entrusted with the duty of directing their country's relations with Korea, attempt to work under existing conditions they will be associating, as it were, with men carrying live bombs in their bosoms.

Friday, June 22.

Telegrams say that there have been some attempts to create a disturbance in Seoul. The first was on the 16th, when arrests of officials were made on account of alleged complicity with the provincial insurrections; the second, on the evening of the 18th, took the form of an abortive attempt to rescue the insurgent leader Cho Ik-hyon, who was brought into the city that evening. The precautions taken by the Japanese were so efficient that these affairs proved quite abortive. There is no other news this morning with relation to the disturbances.

We gather that the appointment of a second Gisei Daijin in the person of Mr. Cho Pyong-ho is not likely to raise any troublesome issue. It is regarded as a purely non-political nomination, the functions of the office being altogether of a ceremonial character, and the occasion—the marriage of the Prince Imperial—being considered of sufficient importance to warrant the measure.

The Korean authorities having shown some disposition to delay the revision and publication of the immigration and mining regulations, pressure has been brought to bear by the acting Resident-General, Mr. Tsuruharu, and it is expected that the regulations will be promulgated very shortly.

A charter has been granted to Baron Shibusawa and his co-promoters, eight in number, for obtaining water power from the rivers Han and Tadong to be employed in Seoul. The concession is for 25 years, and the concessionaries are under pledge to pay 5 per cent. of the profits into the Imperial Treasury. The cost is said to be estimated at 2 million yen.

Marquis Ito, accompanied by Major-Generals Murata and Miyaoka left Oiso on the 20th instant by the 9.20 a.m. train for Bakan where his Excellency will take ship for Fusan. About seventy persons assembled at the station to bid him farewell, and on the 19th the Emperor sent a present of fish and wine, which formed the staple of a parting banquet on that evening.

We have already referred to the views of the Asahi Shimbun and the Jiji Shimpō with regard to the present disturbances in Korea, and have shown that while these two leading journals concur in deprecating any measures against the Throne, they are plainly disposed to advocate the importance of winnowing out the entourage of the Sovereign and setting up clear partitions between the Court and the Administration. But now comes the Kokumin Shimbun which makes light of the whole affair, and, in the words of the old aphorism, warns its countrymen against the folly of "blowing aside the hair to search for a hurt." The Kokumin emphatically takes the line that some disturbances in Korea are inevitable. Just as England has her troubles with the Zulus, Germany hers with the Hottentots and Holland hers with the Achinese, so Japan must not expect to be exempt in Korea. But Japan's good fortune is that these Korean emeutes are mere momentary ebullitions; they vanish into thin air at the first exposure of armed force. On the other hand, all the Powers fully recognise the position Japan holds in Korea, and it is not to be supposed that any one of them seriously contemplates an attempt to reverse the order of things established there in the sequel of two terrible wars. On-lookers who seek to suggest that this foreign Power is intriguing here or that foreign Power there, are merely manufacturing a mare's nest. That there are some foreigners who make it their business to foment trouble between Japan and other States with regard to the Korean problem may unfortunately be undeniable, but they are altogether too insignificant and their efforts too paltry to be worthy of serious attention. If, as the proverb says, melon plants are found blossoming on the confines of the empire, it is needless to trace the stalks back to their roots. Events will of themselves make the connexion clear and these that have sowed will reap a just reward. But the gist of it all is that Japan need not be in the least degree perturbed. She must treat these incidents as more or less inevitable parts of the day's work.

THE PUGH CONSUMPTION CURE.

We have received a pamphlet which partakes of the nature of an advertisement, but we nevertheless make editorial reference to it because of the very exceptional interest that attaches in Japan to everything connected with tuberculosis. It has been calculated that 5 millions of persons perish annually from this fell disease; 170,000 of them in Germany, 150,000 in France; 150,000 in the United States, and 60,000 in England. What the figure for Japan is we do not know, but that it must be very exceptionally large is proved when we consider the numerous deaths occurring from this cause almost every day in Tokyo. A cure, therefore, or anything like a cure, assumes enormous importance in Japanese eyes. The term "Pugh" is simply the decidedly unmusical name of the alleged inventor of the remedy. He is not even a medical man but only a land and estate agent in South Wales. It is now scientifically established that human blood contains two kinds of cells, red and white. The red cell is a builder: its duty is to constantly renovate our strength and recuperate the waste of tissue which takes place in the body. The white cell is a scavenger: its duty is to remove all dead, effete and poisonous matter from the system. Tuberculosis is an invasion of the body by tubercle bacilli which attack all or any organs and tissues. No medicine fatal to them has yet been discovered. But it has been proved that at a distance of 6,000 or 8,000 feet above the surface of the earth, air is found in such a condition that to breathe it is to absorb into the system twice as much oxygen as is inhaled at the surface of the planet. This oxygen multiplies and gives vitality to the red cells of the blood and there is thus created a force fatal to the operations of the poisonous bacilli. The question is, however, how to breathe this rarefied air at high altitudes. It is not feasible to carry patients up in balloons, and to make them ascend mountains would be useless, for the air on a mountain top is more or less vitiated. Mr. Pugh's plan is to bring down the air by means of captive balloons. He explains his process at some length, but space forbids us to follow him into details. The interest lies in the idea.

CHINA.

Friday, June 15.

Another attempt is telegraphed as having been made against the life of the Viceroy of the two Kwang. No particulars are given, but it is stated that the Viceroy received two slight wounds. This official seems to be very unpopular in Canton. He became obnoxious originally on account of his manner of dealing with the affair of the Yeh-Han (Canton-Hangkow) Railway, but the latest news was that this trouble had been satisfactorily adjusted. Two attempts against the life of a Viceroy within the space of a few months make an unusual record.

Saturday, June 16.

When the Chinese Delegates to the West had audience of the Tsar, His Majesty is said to have observed to Mr. Tan Hwang that originally the relations between Russia and China had been exceptionally close, and that geographical conditions and other connexions ought now to make them closer than ever, but unfortunately owing to want of mutual understanding misconceptions frequently occurred. He himself made peace his main object and was entirely free from aggressive intentions. Mr. Tan replied that the two Empires should work together to maintain the general situation and should endeavour to avoid being deceived by ambitions of third parties. Various other political conversation is said to have taken place. The Tsar's attitude towards the Delegates was conspicuously friendly, it is said, and has produced an impression in Peking. Another account (Hochi Shimbun) of the audience makes the Tsar say that, in view of his own experiences, constitutional government was not a thing to be lightly introduced, and he counselled Mr. Tan and Prince Tsai-tse to advise their country's statesmen to exercise great care in adopting so momentous a system.

Concerning Mr. Yang it is rumoured that although his term of service will soon expire, he is likely to be left as his country's Representative in Tokyo.

A telegram from Peking (Asahi) states that Mr. Abe, Japanese Chargé d'Affaires in Peking, made several representations to the Waiwupu with regard to the Customs affair, and that the efficacy of his intervention is fully recognised in diplomatic circles in Peking.

The Emperor of China has quite recovered from his indisposition and has returned from the Summer Palace to the capital.

The latest news of the Nanchang affair is that France has made considerable concessions and that a settlement will be reached probably within a week. This is precisely the opposite of what had been previously reported.

Riots are reported from Anhui, from Kiangsu and also from two places in Peh-chili. The cause in the case of the three provinces seems to be connected with taxation and dear rice.

Monday, June 18.

China, finding herself short of police inspectors in view of her new developments of the police system, has, it is said, telegraphed to Mr. Yang in Tokyo, desiring that any Chinese youths who have passed the standard of study in Japan should be sent home as quickly as possible.

In this context it may be mentioned that the Chinese students in Japan are now said to number over ten thousand, and projects for sending others are constantly reported. Viceroy Chang and Yuan are alleged to be strongly in favour of the measures taken by the Japanese Department of Education last year for the better control of Chinese students. Viceroy Chang is represented as saying that if students sent at Government charges fight against the Japanese Department's regulations, their allowances should be stopped and they should be at once recalled, while if private students take this course, they should be held disqualified for appointment on return to China.

Tuesday, June 19.

The Yellow River seems to be repeating its wonted acts of destruction. It has rendered the Lu-Han Railway impassable during the past week in the Changchieh district of Hunan.

Friday, June 22.

A telegram from Peking to the Jiji Shimpō says that the Viceroy of Yunnan has memorialized the Throne in favour of recovering from France the concession for the Yunnan Railway. This is an outcrop of the China-for-the-Chinese policy in a somewhat unexpected quarter. But the French are not at all likely to surrender the concession without large consideration.

It is alleged (Asahi's correspondence) that France has made certain concessions in connexion with the Nanchang affair and that it has been quickly settled on the basis thus furnished. The concessions are that the indemnity has been reduced by $400,000; that the punishment of the leading inhabitants has been dispensed with; and that the public proclamation which was to have been issued by the central Government has been abandoned. There have been so many rumours about this Nanchang affair that we do not know what to believe, but the Asahi's correspondent is now very positive. The Asahi itself obviously credits this telegram and writes a leading article on the subject. It is an interesting article, for the writer treats broadly the subject of China's foreign relations which, he thinks, have entered a new era. She has learned that the menaces of foreign Powers are not so formidable as she once supposed, and so far from surrendering a Kiaochow by way of atonement for the assassination of a missionary, she now concedes nothing more than a narrow measure of strict justice. And she succeeds. That is not the least notable feature of the case. She wins her way, and it may reasonably be supposed that each success tends to strengthen and confirm her conceptions of the value of a strong attitude. It is all very fine, says the Asahi, and so long as the demands of justice are satisfied no one has any right to complain. But China would do well to look after herself. A little careful introspection would be very timely and useful. If she means to adopt this semi-defiant attitude abroad, she must put her house in order at home, and must, in the first place, take effective steps to prevent the recurrence of incidents which place her plainly in the wrong vis-à-vis foreign States, and, in the second, be careful that her policy is not misconstrued by the anti-foreign elements of her population. These elements should be held in check by every means. Attacks upon missionaries are not necessarily of anti-foreign origin, but the two can easily be confounded. If China's sense of her own responsibilities grows pai passu with development of her self-reliance, well and good, but if she is going to become bumptious, there is trouble ahead.

THE COST OF THE PRISONERS.

Saturday, June 16th.

The Nichi Nichi Shimbun says that Japan having presented her account of expenses connected with the maintenance of the Russian prisoners, St. Petersburg has rejected it on the ground that the sums entered were not really expended. It will be remembered that the clause of the Portsmouth Treaty referring to this matter runs thus:—"The Governments of Japan and Russia shall present to each other, as soon as possible after the delivery of prisoners has been completed, a statement of the direct expenditures respectively incurred by them for the care and maintenance of the prisoners from the date of capture or surrender up to the time of death or delivery. Russia engages to repay to Japan, as soon as possible after the exchange of the statements as above provided, the difference between the actual amount as expended by Japan and the actual amount similarly disbursed by Russia." If what the Nichi Nichi alleges be correct, it would seem that Russia is now relying on the word "actual" in the above article, and is querying the sums which Japan claims to have expended. Without some assurance that such a complication has arisen, it seems futile to discuss the question, but we may say that the Treaty appears to leave very little discretion to either party in this matter. Each is virtually bound to trust the other implicitly, and we think nothing less likely than that Japan should have preferred an exorbitant demand under such circumstances. Russia will show exceedingly bad taste if she makes difficulties, and we shall not believe it of her till the fact is clearly ascertained.

Sunday, June 17th.

We stated above that according to rumour the Russian Government had objected to Japan's account of outlays in connexion with the support of prisoners. It is now said to be doubtful whether any such objection has yet been formally advanced though the Russian Authorities may have intimated something of the kind in the course of the pourparlers. The Asahi Shimbun has a note on the subject. It ascribes Russia's attitude to the fact that some of the prisoners, after return home, made complaints about the treatment they had received in Japan, declared that the food provided for them was uneatable, and alleged that they had been obliged to live at their own charges. To this the Asahi retorts that Japan's manner of treating the Russian prisoners is well known to the world. She did everything in her power to make them comfortable and spared no expense to that end. If some officers chose to spend money of their own on provisions, it was because they wanted luxuries, and the latitude given to them in this matter constitutes a further proof of the courtesy shown by their Japanese guards. The Asahi does not believe that Russia's conscience will permit her to uphold this objection, and urges that if she does uphold it, the Japanese Government should not hesitate to publicly formulate a statement of her manner of treating Japanese prisoners. Meanwhile it is understood that the Japanese account is now in the hands of the Privy Council and has not yet been formally submitted to the Russian Government though pourparlers have taken place.

A case of plague was reported on June 16th in the district of Shikama near Himeji. The same day another case appeared in the village of Otake, near Hiroshima.

MANCHURIA.

Friday, June 15.

A Chinese paper published in Shanghai is quoted by the Jiji and the Asahi as stating that Mr. Yang, Chinese Representative in Tokyo, has telegraphed to his Government warning it against Japan's project of monopolising the industries of Manchuria. His Excellency is made to say that if Japan's programme of mine-exploiting be left unchecked, she will virtually control all the profitable enterprises of Mukden. We do not imagine that any special credit attaches to this story. The correspondents of our Tokyo contemporaries have thought it worthy of being telegraphed, but few will be found to agree with them.

It is related that some twelve hundred troopers of Viceroy Yuan's army, who were sent to Changtu for the purpose of quelling the Hunghutsz, showed such a want of discipline and made such confusion in the town that a collision occurred between them and the small body of Japanese soldiers still remaining in the place. The Chinese cavalrymen surrounded the civil-government office, and for a moment things looked very ugly, but happily order was restored without any casualties.

On the 13th instant Admirals Togo, Ito, Kabayama, Kamimura and their party viewed the forts at Port Arthur and returned to Tairen that evening. General Count Nozu being unwell, was obliged to remain behind at Tairen.

Saturday, June 16.

The Tokyo Commercial Society has memorialized the Governor-General of Liaotung, General Baron Oshima, on the subject of South-Manchurian enterprises. The memorialists make several points. In the first place, while acknowledging that they have now become acquainted with the official policy as to railways, they ask that no time be lost in publishing some statement of the carrying capacity and the rates on the East Chinese Railway, so as to facilitate comparison with the transport resources offered by the Liao River. In the second place, they desire that the large area of land in the immediate vicinity of the Tairen wharf, which was used for storage purposes during the war and is now lying vacant, should be appropriated as quickly as possible to the building of warehouses and to other commercial needs. To the same context belongs an application that a number of buildings which served for storing warlike material while Japanese armies occupied Manchuria but which are now lying idle, should be at once utilized for merchandise. Again, while expressing satisfaction that the wharves have been placed at the disposal of the general public, they complain that the charge for wharfage—5 sen per ton—is too high. Another point which causes them much dissatisfaction is the fact that, thus far, criminal tribunals alone have been organized in southern Manchuria. They insist that without the existence of civil courts business operations can not be conducted with any degree of security, and they advise the immediate formation of such tribunals. The medical-inspection arrangements at Tairen are also condemned as very inefficient, with the result that ships are sometimes delayed fruitlessly for several days. Finally they condemn in strong terms the system of granting passports to Japanese desiring to travel northward of Pulantien by rail. Pulantien is the point where the railway emerges from the area leased to Japan, and in order to pass it going northward a special permit is required. The memorialists say that long delays are caused by the regulation. There is no valid reason why delay should be entailed, but as for the passport system, we do not see how it can be immediately abolished. The memorialists add a clause asking for greater celerity in handling telegrams at Tairen, for permission to merchants to use cipher, and for the extension of the parcels post to Manchuria. It is altogether a very practical memorial.

The rumour is repeated that the Governor-General of Mukden and the Chinese Representative in Tokyo have been sending telegrams to their Government in Peking in the sense that Japan is strenuously endeavouring to secure a monopoly of trade and industry in Manchuria, and that China should take steps to prevent this. In consequence of the receipt of these messages the Peking statesmen are beginning to believe, it is alleged, in the justice of M. Pokotiloff's recent complaint that all the pressure is brought to bear upon Russia by China, and that Japan, though acting in a much more arbitrary and menacing manner, is left to pursue her own sweet will. It is a confused and unconvincing story. Where the grain of truth lies we find difficulty in detecting. That Japan means to work for her own hand commercially and industrially in Manchuria may be taken for granted. She has to recoup very heavy outlays, and she would deserve to be set up among the nations as a butt for derision if she failed to utilize her opportunities. But so long as she does so legitimately, what cause is there for complaint? No one has yet formulated against her, so far as we know, any charge of unlawful procedure. It is possible that merchandise may have found its way into Shingking via Dalny without paying duty, but ample excuse is to be found for that incident in the temporary delay which must precede the establishment of customs stations. Dalny is to be a free port so far as concerns goods for the area leased by Japan in the Liaotung Peninsula, and it remains to be determined how duties will be levied on merchandise going further inland. With the exception of this point there is no valid complaint. It is therefore scarcely credible that Mr. Yang has been sending telegrams of the nature attributed to him. He may, however, have been struck by the energy Japan is showing and he may have informed his Government of the results of his observations. Such a message would easily lend itself to sensational distortion.

Monday, June 18.

It appears that the agreement concluded between Major-General Nakamura and the Russian envoy provides that the section of railway northward from Kunchuling, which is to be handed over to Japan on the 1st of August, shall terminate at a point 8 versts south of the Changchung station, at which point the seventy-eighth shunting of the railway is situated. This arrangement is a sequel of the understanding that the ownership of the Changchung station shall be settled by diplomatic negotiation; an understanding came to when Major-General Fukushima and Major-General Ovanovsky concluded a general convention with regard to the transfer of the line. Little has been publicly stated about this problem but to us the difficulty raised by General Ovanovsky seems quite inexplicable. For the 6th Article of the Portsmouth Treaty pledges the Imperial Russian Government "to transfer and assign to the Imperial Government of Japan * * * the railway between Chungchun (Kuan-cheng-tsz) and Port Arthur, and all its branches." Now the Changchung station is 2 miles south of the town of Changchung, and there cannot, therefore, be the least doubt that since the town of Changchung is explicitly mentioned as the northern limit of Japan's acquisition, the station must of necessity be included. And not only the station, but also the 2 miles of line between the station and Changchung. It will be surprising if the Russian Government supports General Ovanovsky's contention in this matter.

It is very broadly hinted that Russia's delay in negotiating a treaty with China is of deliberate intention, the purpose assigned to her being to gain time for her subjects in North Manchuria to establish a footing which, when the articles of the treaty come to be finally discussed, will have assumed the character of an accomplished fact. In pursuance of this policy her people in the two provinces are busily purchasing land, cutting timber and digging mines. Against these proceedings the Waiwupu, inspired by continuously arriving and urgent reports from the local officials of Kirin and Hailungcheng, have again addressed remonstrances to M. Pokotiloff who, however, uniformly pleads the absence of instructions from St. Petersburg. Without attributing to the Russian Government any deliberately sinister purpose of the nature here suggested, is it not possible to account fully for its hesitation by reference to the state of the Empire's domestic affairs. Russia is confronted at home by a situation which may well occupy her whole attention to the complete exclusion of such comparatively paltry topics as the exploitation of two Manchurian provinces. In the meanwhile the man at the front finds his opportunity and is utilizing it to the full.

Monday, June 18.

Rumour says that the Russian merchants of Harbin have addressed a telegram to M. Pokotiloff urging that, as the Japanese are about to make Dalny a free port, the same course should be pursued by Russia at Vladivostok. These merchants probably labour under the misapprehension that the freedom of Dalny means the admittance of all imports to Manchuria without the payment of any customs dues. But that is not the case. Free entry will be given only to goods destined for the territory leased by Japan in Liaotung.

The Governor of Kirin is reported to have complained to Peking that Korean adventurers are swelling the ranks of the Hunghutsz.

Tuesday, June 19.

Some interesting details are given by the Chuo Shimbun with regard to the prospects of the South Manchurian Railway company which has just been sanctioned by Imperial Ordinance. Our contemporary says that Tashikiao, which is the junction of the Newchwang and Port-Arthur lines, remains a natural point of division, and that the sections to the north and the south of that may be considered separately. On the northern section the freight charge is 5 sen per ton and on the southern it is 2 sen. As for passenger fares, they are in accordance with the Japanese system. On these bases the gross earnings of the road since the Japanese opened it for public traffic have averaged 600,000 yen monthly, and the operating expenses have been 255,000 yen (an average of 17 yen daily per mile assuming the mileage to be 500), so that there is a nett profit of 345,000 yen per month. A great stream of goods and passengers flows steadily towards Harbin, where the Russians seem to be carrying out very extensive works and where considerable supplies are needed. This may not prove a permanent element of traffic, but, even though it should fall off in time, there will be the compensating factors of the European traffic, and the feeding obtained from the Mukden-Antung and the Mukden-Hsinmintun lines when these are converted into permanent roads. The Chuo therefore speaks of the prospect as most promising. But it is to be observed that much depends on the amount at which the road is capitalized. The present nett earnings show an annual return of only some 4 million yen, which would not justify capitalization at a higher figure than 50 millions, whereas 150 and even 170 millions are spoken of. There remain, however, the Fushun mines. From these the mineral now extracted is put by our contemporary at about 1,000 tons which is used chiefly for the railway and for official purposes, the residue being sold by tender. The cost of taking the coal from the mine is said to be from 2.30 to 2.50 yen per ton—another authority recently stated the figure at 1.20 yen—and it sells at Mukden for 8 yen, at Liaoyang for 11 yen and at Tairen for 15 yen. The Chuo alleges that, all expenses included, the mineral would not cost more than 5 yen by the time it reaches Dalny, so that, allowing a loss of 1 yen per ton en route, there remains a clear profit of 9 yen. If the coal were offered at less than 14 or 15 yen in Dalny, it would compete injuriously with Japanese coal which sells there at from 15 to 16 yen. But these figures require verification.

It is stated that the Chinese Government has decided to create a Viceroy of Manchuria and that the post was offered to Yuan, who, however, declined to accept it. The belief at present is that the Governor of Mukden, Mr. Chao Erh-sun, will receive the nomination.

The Kokumin Shinbun says that the total of war-notes issued by Japan in 1904-5 was 140 million yen, of which amount 90 millions were put into circulation in Manchuria. The withdrawal of the latter has been rapid, however. At the beginning of the present year the volume had been reduced to 66,548,000 yen, and it now barely exceeds 20 millions. The United States Government is understood to have made a representation in favour of the speedy withdrawal of this currency.

The Jiji Shinpo says that Tairen will become a completely free port from the 1st of July: that is to say, all goods entering there for destinations within the limits of Japan's leased territory will be exempt from duty. Hitherto merchandise coming in Chinese junks has had to pay, but this practice will cease from next month.

Thursday, June 21.

It is stated that negotiations have commenced for establishing a China-Japan Bank. Apparently Mukden is the seat of the pourparlers.

Admiral Count Kabayama, Baron Kioura and their party arrived in Mukden on the 18th instant.

Major-General Fukushima and Mr. Yamaza, who are believed to have been charged with some important duties in connexion with the settlement at Antung, have concluded their mission with unexpected ease. They set out from Antung for Mukden on the 18th.

Mr. Ishizuka, head of the civil government of Kwanto, is represented as saying that the post-bellum enterprises in Manchuria have been mapped out, and that on his return to Tokyo they will be finally decided. Tairen must be a free port, so far as concerns imports to the leased territory, but some time will elapse before full facilities can be given to steamers inasmuch as there is still a large demand for military transport in connexion with the evacuation. Whenever the wharf is free it is placed at the disposal of the Nippon Yusen Kaisha or the Osaka Shosen Kaisha. It is probable that the Chinese Government will re-establish a custom house at Tairen as is the case at Kiaochow and as was the case during the Russian occupation of Dalny. The Russians received 20 per cent. of the dues levied. That seems to be the only feasible arrangement. The Japanese Authorities having no concern with imports destined for points outside the limits of the leased area in Kwanto, the work of taxing such imports must be managed entirely by the Chinese. It is contemplated to have an exclusive Japanese settlement in Yingkow and negotiations for the purpose are now progressing. Speaking of transport facilities by the Liao River and by the railway, a subject introduced by the Tokyo Trading Society in its recent representation, Mr. Ishizuka expressed the opinion that as the carrying capacity of the railway is limited and can not suffice for Manchuria's needs, the river will always remain serviceable. As for the Fushun mine, he spoke of it as the life-blood of the railway and advocated its exploitation by the railway company. He farther explained that it is in contemplation to shape the administrative machinery after the Formosan model, but the seat of civil administration will probably be at Tairen, as there is no suitable building at Port Arthur. Finally, referring to the Tairen water works, he said that the Russians had left them only partially constructed and that they are now being rebuilt.

Friday, June 22.

If the telegrams may be credited there is an interesting diplomatic game now in progress in Peking. Hitherto China has been pressing Russia to continue the negotiations with regard to Manchuria, but now the tables are turned and it is Russia who desires expedition whereas China holds back. While confessing that sources of information are exceedingly difficult of access and that much of the intelligence sent over the wires is obviously either tainted by prejudice or vitiated by internal evidences of fabrication, we interpret the telegrams as indicating that the situation is something like this: the Russian generals have concluded with the Governors of Kirin and the Amur certain agreements of which Russian subjects are now taking full advantage, and consequently there is nothing immediately tangible to be gained by pushing on the negotiations in Peking, since delay in the latter means that conditions difficult to reverse will gradually arise in loco. China, conscious of this state of affairs, has let it be known that she will not recognise or confirm any of the above agreements, and in the face of that menace M. Pokotiloff has become desirous of renewing the negotiations. But his Excellency now finds that Mr. Tang Shaoi is disposed to procrastinate, and complaints are therefore being addressed by the Russian Legation to Prince Ching, their purpose being to have the conduct of the negotiations removed from Tang's hands.

But we admit that this interpretation is largely conjectural. The only fact apparently quite certain is that remarkable delay is taking place, and as there is no ostensible reason for obstacles on China's side, we must assume that Russia is mainly responsible for it.

Tokyo papers state that the duties entrusted to Major-General Fukushima and Mr. Yamaza, who are now in Manchuria, are, in the first place, to make arrangements for the removal of military administration at Antung, Mukden and Yingkow, and its replacement by Chinese civil government. The order of these transfers has to be determined carefully. In the Changtu direction there will not be any possibility of making the above substitution before the autumn, but it is said that the Japanese Government desires to exercise all possible expedition in the matter. A second duty entrusted to the Fukushima-Yamaza commission is to settle the problem of the Changchun railway station. This question was recently spoken of as likely to be discussed between St. Petersburg and Tokyo direct, but rumour now says that it will be entrusted to commissioners on the spot.

THE SEOUL-FUSAN RAILWAY.

A meeting of the shareholders of this railway was held in Tokyo on the 15th instant to discuss the details of the company's dissolution, in view of the fact that the railway is to be handed over to the Government next month. The meeting proved very stormy on account of a measure introduced by the directors for granting consideration on the following scale:—

To the officers of the Railway (8,000 Yen . in number, apart from the Directors) .....	250,000
To the Directors now in office .....	50,000
To the projectors and promoters .....	50,000
To the associated Koreans .....	50,000
To the Reserves (for division ?) .....	10,000
Total .....	410,000

The general feeling seemed to be that such appropriations were, if not excessive, at all events premature in view of the fact that the sum which the shareholders would receive had not yet been decided. Mr. Amenomiya tried to effect a compromise which would have saved some of the projected beneficiaries at the cost of others, but the meeting declined to be thus placated, and it was finally decided, on the motion of Mr. Inouye Kakugoro, that the settlement of the question should be deferred until the general meeting in September, when the affairs of the company will finally be wound up.

THE KOBE MAILS.

Considerable complaints still continue to be heard in Yokohama with regard to the Kobe mail. One foreign firm on complaining to the Yokohama Post Office recently received the following reply:—

POST OFFICE.

Yokohama, June 19th, 1906.

DEAR SIR,—In Reply to your compliment we beg to inform you that in the express train being limited the number of Mail bags in the carriage, if in the first station reached to limited number would no more carry in the next station. Last night express train was closed at Kobe station, and therefore, your post card at Kioto was sent by the train reached at 10.40 a.m. this morning to Hiranuma station.

Your faithfully,

POST MASTER.

One can faintly gather what the Post Office wishes to convey by this letter, but the manner of its expression leaves much to be desired.

THE "SEIYU-KAI" AND ITS FOUNDER.

On the eve of his return to Korea Marquis Ito invited some twenty members of the Seiyu-kai, its most prominent members, to a farewell dinner at the Maple Club in Tokyo. There do not seem to have been any set speeches but some semi-conversational utterances of the Marquis are quoted by the Chuo Shimbun, whose editor, Mr. Ooka Ikuzo, was among those present. "The Seiyu-kai," said the Marquis, "has of late given evidence of large progress along party lines and I am exceedingly glad to observe it. * * * There are many difficult questions connected with the post-bellum enterprises, but we must make up our minds to go ahead with them in a constructive spirit. Some people take a pessimistic view. Well, we staked the country's existence when we began the recent war. We had no assurance of victory. Happily we won every time we fought and so achieved an unexpectedly good result. Our military men have to be thanked of course, but they had the strength of the nation behind them, and thus the issue may be attributed in part to constitutional government. If unhappily the fight had gone against us, the result must undoubtedly have been that Japan, though nominally independent, would be as Korea to-day is. But she now stands in the position of victor and therefore there is nothing to be pessimistic about in the future. Take Italy's case. Her extent, her soil and her climate resemble our own more or less, but she has a population of only 25 millions and a national debt of over 5,000 million yen. We have a population of 45 or 46 millions and our debt is not 3,000 millions. So long as Italy can bear it there is no reason why Japan should not be able to do so. Italy has no coal. From the operating of her railways to the working of her factories and her agricultural plant she has to depend on foreign countries for the materials of her motive power. Japan, already rich in coal, lately received a large addition to her supply. That she is in a hopeful situation goes without saying. There is no occasion to talk pessimistically about the time of the war. If a man calculating the water in his pond were to torment himself lest a drought should come, dry up all the water in so many months and kill the fish, there would be no end to anxiety. It is to be hoped that, having faith in the country's fortunes the nation will fare forward strenuously and stoutly. Of course recklessness will not do. What I want to see is that the Seiyu-kai, taking thought for past and future and being careful in all things, should shoulder the burden of the post bellum undertakings. There is no necessity to think of such things as changes of Cabinet. The Government may be changed as often as you please but a Daruma with his gold-producing hammer is not likely to appear. There is nothing for it but our own earnestness and diligence."

THE SIXTH NATIONAL EXHIBITION.

There have been five National exhibitions in Japan. The first took place in 1877 and the rule then laid down was that there should be one every fourth year. Accordingly the second took place in 1881. But thereafter the rule ceased to be operative. Not until 1890 was the third Exhibition opened. All these had been in Tokyo. The fourth was in Kyoto in 1895 and the fifth in Osaka in 1903. Nevertheless there still exists a pretence of respect for the rule, and talk was heard at one time of having the sixth exhibition in Tokyo in 1907. The idea has been abandoned, however, and it is now thought that 1908 will be the year, though some well-informed people speak of 1909 and some even of 1910. We are inclined to think that this last year would be best, for by that time Tokyo might hope to have adequate hotel accommodation. The exhibition is to be on an unprecedented scale, not merely national but, according to rumour, international, being thus the first of its kind in Japan. Accommodation on an unprecedented scale will consequently have to be provided, and altogether the programmes hitherto pursued must be radically extended. The Diet will have to be asked for a considerable appropriation, and it can not make it at soonest until the early part of next year, which means that the time for the opening of the exhibition can not be fixed until then, and as at least 18 months' notice will have to be given to the world, we believe that 1910 will be the earliest date. But the matter is now occupying official attention. A very strong committee has been appointed, comprising such names as those of Mr. Wada (chairman), Barons Otori and Senge, Messrs. Yoshikawa, Nakakoji, Wakatsuki, Nakazawa, Ozaka, Chinda, Matsudaira, Tsuji and Dr. Hatoyama. It is to be hoped that the mistake of insufficient advertising will not be repeated on this occasion. America has shown Japan how to work this part of the affair, and we trust that the example will not be lost. The sole way to make the exhibition a success to the exhibitors and to the projectors is to ensure the attendance of a large crowd of foreign visitors and that can be effected only by advertising. As showing how these exhibitions have grown in size and cost since their inception the following table is published by Japanese journals:—

Place.	Area of site. Tsubo.	Area of buildings. Tsubo.	Cost of buildings. Yen.	Total cost. Yen.	Date.
First Exhibition, Tokyo.....	29,807	3,012	—	122,040	1877
Second Exhibition, Tokyo.....	43,300	7,563	162,116	275,350	1881
Third Exhibition, Tokyo .....	40,000	9,725	230,535	500,810	1890
Fourth Exhibition, Kyoto .....	50,558	10,519	193,687	377,250	1896
Fifth Exhibition, Osaka.....	104,876	14,725	536,190	1,093,970	1903

It will be seen that Osaka did the thing on a far larger scale than either Tokyo or Kyoto had done it. That was like Osaka, but the city came out with a debt of over a million yen.

THE WAKAMATSU FOUNDRY.

It appears from an article in the Chuo Shimbun that the steel foundry at Wakamatsu benefited considerably by the war. The Diet, as our readers know, has, for years entertained a reluctant mood in the matter of this enterprise, and we can not but admit that the Diet has reason to hesitate, for the foundry has involved expenditures enormously in excess of the original estimates, and the frank opinion of competent foreign experts is that the money has not always been spent to the best advantage. When the war commenced, however, the Government had to make the fullest possible use of all the opportunities within reach, and thus a sum of 3,664,000 yen was given to the foundry out of the extraordinary funds. The technical details set forth in our Tokyo contemporary with regard to the manner of laying out this money are not of general interest, but the broad result is that the foundry is now said to be in a comparatively efficient condition. Last year the output was from sixty to sixty-five thousand tons of steel; this year the quantity is estimated at eighty thousand, and next year it will be from a hundred and twenty to a hundred and thirty thousand. If the capacity of the smelting furnaces were increased the output could easily be raised to a hundred and eighty thousand tons. The sum of 2½ million yen appropriated by the Diet last session to the purposes of the foundry and to be spread over several years, will be used in part for adding to the smelting furnaces, and thus in 1908 the foundry will turn out 180,000 tons of steel. Readers who have followed the records of this enterprise with any attention will remember that in the middle of 1903 the foundry was regarded as almost a complete failure. A committee of investigation appointed by the Government advised that the whole concern should be handed over to a private company, and the name of the latter (Nippon Seitetsu Kaisha) was already indicated, a bill also being already drafted for legalizing the transfer. Public criticism made itself heard very loudly at that time, but thereafter when the Empire's relations with Russia grew strained and when finally war broke out, the Government were able to extend to the foundry, without parliamentary consent, the munificent treatment needed to make it a success and it is now a flourishing affair giving employment to 6,000 hands and destined soon to turn out as much steel as the country needs. Thus the success of the foundry may be said to be a result of the war.

THE ADMINISTRATIVE ESTABLISHMENT IN JAPAN.

The Yorozu Choho has compiled an interesting list showing the number of Japanese administrative officials and their salaries since 1885. This year is chosen because it marked a new departure in administrative organization. Up to that time the chief of the administration was called Daijo-Daijin, and the two next in authority were the Ministers of the Left and of the Right (Sa-Daijin and U-Daijin). Moreover, the ranks of officialdom included a large number of men who were employed because they had lost their sources of income at the Restoration and would have been wholly destitute had not the State assisted them. This peculiar feature of the time was recognised generally, and though some critics spoke bitterly of the Hambatsu Seifu (clan government) and the burden it imposed on the nation, the prevalent feeling was one of thankfulness that such signal changes had been effected at such small cost. In 1885, however, Marquis Ito and Count Inouye, the two great reformers of Japan, felt that the time had come to modify this relic of the past. They remodelled the administration, forming a Cabinet on Occidental lines with a Prime Minister (Sōri-Daijin) and Ministers of Departments. This must be borne in mind when examining the following table, and noting the great reduction of official staff that took place simultaneously with the inauguration of the new system:—

Number of Officials Total Salaries.

A.D.	Number of Officials	Total Salaries.
		Yen.
1885	98,265	17,621,520
1886	55,144	13,471,056
1887	59,102	14,490,168
1888	60,661	15,015,360
1889	61,640	15,287,460
1890	65,963	16,567,668
1891	48,979	11,254,361
1892	49,078	11,438,116
1893	45,617	10,761,168
1894	46,698	11,035,496
1895	46,203	11,405,425
1896	57,502	15,516,262
1897	65,754	17,104,226
1898	68,876	18,587,710
1899	78,983	22,877,490
1900	92,571	25,408,167
1901	97,616	26,860,033
1902	99,992	28,476,137
1904	96,817	28,799,097

It will be noted that a very remarkable period of diminution commenced in 1891 and continued until 1893, so that, in the latter year, the establishment did not aggregate even one half of what it had been in 1885. This change was due to the influence of the Diet, which began to sit in 1891. Then came the China-Japan war of 1894-5, and from 1896 onwards there has been a steady increase in the number of officials until now they are nearly as numerous as they were in 1885 and their salaries aggregate 65 per cent. more. On the other hand the administrative work is probably twice as onerous now as it was 20 years back.

IDEAS ON MUNICIPAL GOVERNMENT.

We have read with considerable entertainment a letter addressed to one of our local contemporaries over the signature of Habitante on the subject of "Police and municipal affairs." The writer wants to know whether, in view of the complaints that have of late appeared in the public press about municipal mismanagement, land-renters have any redress. He says further:—"In the old days when there was a Municipal Council and again later when the Local Authorities took over Municipal Affairs in the settlement these matters were attended to and things ran fairly smoothly, the funds for this work were derived from the Ground Rents (so-called) and I venture to assert that during the period referred to there was more attention paid to the scavenging of our streets than is now the case, and the question naturally arises as to what is now done with these monies; certainly little or none of it is expended for the purposes for which it is collected. What an impression our 'Globe Trotters' must have of the way Municipal affairs are run in this the most important port in the country!" "The old days"—what reminiscences the words conjure up! But truly on looking back carefully nothing occurs to us more vividly than the fact that ever since Yokohama was a settlement these complaints about scavenging, sewage, drainage and cognate matters have been chronic. We dare affirm that if all the letters addressed to the local newspapers during the past 40 years were resurrected and reckoned, fully one half of them would be found to have had for topic ill-repaired roads, dirty streets, obtrusive night-soil, offensive creeks, inefficient police, or some such matter. Whenever Yokohama has nothing more exciting to think about it devotes its great mind to municipal lamentations. The thing is proverbial. From the days of "Marten Dohmen, a Dutchman," as Charles Rickerby called our first municipal director, through those of Sir Harry Parkes who thought that with strenuous diplomacy and 20 years leisure it might be possible to organize a duly competent foreign municipality in Yokohama, down to this moment when the settlement has assumed a Japanese name, no feature of local journalism has been so perennial as the anonymous correspondent's plaint about municipal mismanagement. It will always be so, we strongly suspect, so long as the settlement is a separate entity. "Habitante" caps his indictment by asking "what is now done with these monies" (the ground rent) and by opining that "little or none of it is expended for the purposes for which it is collected." But concerning that part of the subject it is very pertinent to ask, first, what is the purpose for which the land-rents are collected, and secondly, what portion of them should be devoted to municipal objects.

DEATH OF MR. YANO JIRO.

Mr. Yano Jiro, whose death has just been announced, was born in 1844. He spent several years in America whence he returned at the early age of 32, having served creditably for a considerable time as Japanese Chargé d'Affairs. At that time many ways of rising in the world were open to him, but at the instance of Mr. (subsequently Viscount) Mori, he willingly accepted the position of head of the Shōhō Koshū-jo, embryo of the present High Commercial College. The Japanese had not yet begun to pay attention to practical education and the institution over which Mr. Yano was called to preside had only some 20 students. That a man of such attainments and with such prospects in other directions should have devoted himself uniquely to such an apparently paltry work and that Viscount Mori should have assigned him to it, bear witness at once to the public spirit of the former and the prescience of the latter. Mr. Yano brought to his task extraordinary energy and diligence, as well as a personality of quite exceptional charm. He was in truth one of those rare men so highly gifted that success waits to be commended by them. What are the dimensions of the debt of gratitude that Japan owes him it would be hard to say, but during the 18 years that he devoted to the development of commercial education he established a title to be called its father in Japan, and when impaired health compelled him to resign in 1893, he could already see growing to lusty competence from the seeds sown by himself some 40 commercial schools throughout the Empire, while the college over which he had personally presided had come to rank as one of the country's greatest institutions. In 1898 Mr. Yano's malady developed symptoms of tuberculosis, but in the summer of 1903 he seemed to have returned from the verge of the tomb to a multitude of rejoicing friends, and in June of that year a congratulatory banquet was given to him in the Imperial Hotel under the auspices of Count Okuma, Baron Shibusawa and other influential men. Two years later, however, the tell disease re-asserted himself, and by the spring of the present year his condition was recognised as hopeless. At 3 a.m. on the 18th instant he fell into an unconscious condition and remained so until the end. The sadness of the event was intensified by the fact that the 17th instant had been fixed for the marriage of his daughter to the son of Baron Takasaki, and he was unable to witness this event which he had ardently desired. His memory will long remain green in many hearts for he possessed the genuine affection of a very large circle of friends.

THE GUIDES QUESTION.

Probably no other class of Japanese inflict more injury on their country than do the guides. They may not be worse than their congeners in certain other lands, but the foreign tourist who visits these islands has a preconceived standard and is very intolerant of any failure to satisfy it. The guides are for the most part quite illiterate. An agent well acquainted with a majority of them assures us that among 60 whom he knows, only 13 can read a hotel bill. It goes without saying that men who have never studied are not competent to give to tourists the information which the latter seek—historical, archæological and æsthetic information. Attempts have been made to induce them to repair their ignorance, but they are quite content with the existing state of affairs, and they prefer devoting their spare time to pleasure. Their defective knowledge, however, is of secondary importance compared with their want of principle. Any way of making money seems good enough in their eyes. The greatly fleeced tourist has spoken out once or twice recently, but as a rule the tourist does not know that he has been swindled. He gathers an impression that Japan is a much more expensive place than he had imagined, and he warns his friends to strike it out of their itinerary, but he fails to discover that his guide has been collecting 20 or 30 per cent. on all his outlays. This is a subject on which we have dilated again and again. The members of the Welcome Society are fully alive to the abuse, but they have never discovered any effective method of remedy. No better plan appears to have been yet devised than that of Mr. Minami (of Minami and Sons' Tourist Agency). His idea is to induce educated men to act as guides, for not only do they possess, or can easily acquire, the necessary fund of information, but also they represent a much higher type of morality. They must be youths, of course: persons who have had scholastic training soon attain a position which they would not exchange for that of guide, or, if they have failed to obtain such a position in mature years, are tolerably sure to fail as guides also. Then, again, the term "guide" is objectionable: never very respectable, it has become almost disreputable owing to the abuses that disfigure the profession. "Interpreter" therefore has been substituted. Mr. Minami's men are all "interpreters" who have graduated at the University or at some high-class college. In the interval of finding a life profession they are very glad to find employment as interpreters, especially since they thus gain experience in speaking English. We see no other way to leaven with competence and honesty the large lump of ignorance and chicanery from which the average guide is moulded.

A fresh case of plague was reported in Kobe on June 16th, the patient being a jinrikisha coolie living at Naka-Yamatedori.

THE COMPETITION ON THE SHANGHAI LINE.

A very common incident thirty-five or thirty-six years ago in Japan was that foreign employees of the Japanese Government imagined themselves to be the victims of insulting remarks or directions addressed to them by their employers whereas faulty interpretation alone was in fault. Thus a letter couched in the most courteous terms would be addressed to an employee, but when transformed into English by one of the translators of those days,—men whose knowledge of foreign languages could not compare with that of their successors in the present era,—the polite phraseology of the document would be exchanged for decidedly rough language, not because the interpreter had the smallest desire to offend but because his vocabulary failed in comprehensiveness. We imagine that a translation published by the Japan Gazette on the 15th instant may perhaps be found to have repeated the above experience. The original is a re-production by the Shogyo Shimpō of some remarks made by Mr. Iwanaga, a managing director of the Nippon Yusen Kaisha, on the subject of competition in the maritime carrying service. On the whole the translation is excellent, and conveys a good idea of the resolute tone adopted by Mr. Iwanaga. But in one or two instances Mr. Iwanaga's words assume in their English garb a severer character than they bear in the original. For example, he is made to say:—"There are several measures for dealing the rival a deadly blow." The adjective "deadly" is scarcely justified by the original which runs:—Omoi ni kare wo shite mata tatsu atawazaru tei no dageki wo kuwori no shudan wa shuji naki ni arazaredo (One can see that various devices are not wanting for administering a blow such that he will not come forward again; i.e. a crushing blow). Further Mr. Iwanaga is made to say:—"It is the duty and object of the N. Y. K. to check the arrogance of foreign steamers to the East of Suez." We do not find this term "arrogance" in the original. The words are gaisen no chōryō bakko, which signify rather "the light-hearted assurance of foreign vessels." Mr. Iwanaga's language certainly breathes much determination and even defiance but it can scarcely be charged with rudeness.

Not the least interesting feature of Mr. Iwanaga's remarks is the reference he makes to the Hankow-Shanghai line. It is known to our readers that, some three years ago, the Nippon Yusen Kaisha purchased from a British subject, Mr. McBain, of Shanghai, several steamers plying on the Yangtze with wharfage accommodation on the fore-shore of the British Settlement at Hankow. But when the time came for hoisting the Japanese flag on these boats, the competing British firms at Hankow raised a question whether the privilege of wharfage could be properly enjoyed in the British settlement of Hankow by vessels sailing under the flag of a foreign State. Incredible as it may seem this plea obtained official recognition and the Nippon Yusen Kaisha were obliged to seek accommodation elsewhere. They found it without difficulty in the French Settlement, and they were offered it in the Russian Settlement on such tempting terms that the offer would have been accepted had not Japan's relations with Russia showed indications of becoming strained. We have not seen the explanations given by the British Authorities in this case, but the incident is in such extremely marked contrast with Great Britain's usually liberal policy that the existence of some very exceptional factors must be assumed. The affair has produced an extremely bad impression in Japan, and a statement of reasons is much to be desired.

FOREIGN VISITORS TO JAPAN.

The question has often been asked, "how much money do foreign visitors spend annually in Japan?" and it has elicited a great number of varying estimates. In fact, the reply must be largely a matter of guess-work. The Fiji Shimpō, however, seems content to assume forty millions of yen as the average figure for years previous to 1906, though it does not furnish any explanation of the way this calculation is reached. This year, however, our contemporary thinks that the expenditure has been still larger. At Yokohama, for example, great numbers of Americans have landed, and their outlays are thought to have brought much profit to local trades-folk and to have caused something like a plethora of money in the market. It would seem, however, that the San Francisco earthquake has produced a very discouraging effect. Thus in April 257 British tourists and 245 American came to Yokohama, whereas in May the figures fell to 168 and 112 respectively. The following list is given by the Fiji as taken from the Customs Returns:—

It is worthy of note that although the number of American citizens calling at Yokohama greatly exceeds the number of British subjects, there is scarcely any appreciable difference between the numbers of these two nationals landing at the port. Also in the statistics published by us on the 13th instant, it was shown that during the twelvemonth ended May 31st, 1905, the number of British subjects visiting Japan was 2,531 and the number of American citizens 2,425. There is an error, therefore, in the frequently heard statement that the great majority of tourists coming to Japan are American. Great Britain sends quite as many. Another point is that as the total number of tourists coming here in the year ended May 31st, 1905, was 15,214, the Fiji's assumption of an outlay of forty million yen works out at 2,622 yen per tourist. That appears to us to be about five times too much.

Cases of plague were reported on June 18th at Tokushima.

NOTES ON CURRENT EVENTS.

The useful jinrikisha is now one of the most heavily taxed articles in Tokyo. No impost is levied on it, but it pays a tax to the prefecture (6 yen), a tax to the city (2.40 yen), a special city tax (8 yen) and a miscellaneous city tax (1.20 yen), so that the aggregate is 17.60 yen annually. Considering that a very good jinrikisha can be bought for some 35 or 40 yen, it will be seen that the local taxes amount to nearly 50 per cent. of the value of the article; or, in other words, the jinrikisha could be purchased for the sum of the taxes levied on it in two years. This tax illustrates the Japanese system of trying to graduate the imposts so that they shall fall heaviest on the wealthiest classes. Only fairly well-to-do folks can afford to keep jinrikisha, and a tax on such a luxury is not felt by the lower orders at all. People that have carriages are called on to pay still more heavily.

By way of corollary we may refer to the house-tax and the land-rate as levied in the suburbs of Tokyo. Take the case of a man inhabiting a house which covers, say 130 or 140 tsubo, with outhouses, and stands in a plot of land measuring 5,000 tsubo, in the Azabu district. His municipal land rate amounts to 26.40 yen per annum and his house-tax to 70.16 yen. These are very moderate figures. They do not indicate any very onerous burden. They show, too, that, roughly speaking, the house-tax is about 3 times the land rate.

There are reports that, owing to the ravages of an insect, the production of silk in Gifu prefecture, instead of being very plentiful as was originally anticipated, will be less than the average by about a million yen worth. In Nagano prefecture also a heavy hail storm took place on the 12th instant, causing much damage to crops. Kanazawa on the same day suffered from a hail-storm, and in the neighbourhood of Mito the inuanshi has made its appearance, endangering the rice crop.

There are indications of storm in various parts of the Empire.

Marquis Ito was received by the Emperor in farewell audience on the 16th instant and had the honour of lunching with his Majesty. The Marquis left Tokyo on the afternoon of the 16th for Oiso, whence he will start for Korea on the 20th.

In the Yorozu Choho we find a note on the subject of the chief promotions in rank which it has been decided to make in connexion with the war. Our contemporary does not pretend that its information is absolutely correct but it alleges that official circles are confident on the subject. The names given are these:—

Marquis Ito	to be raised to the rank of Prince.
Marquis Yamagata	" " "
Marquis Oyama	" " "
Count Inouye	" " Marquis.
Count Matsukata	" " "
Count Katsura	" " "
Admiral Togo	" " Count.
Baron Komura	" " Viscount.
Baron Yamagata	" " "

It will be observed that this list omits several names whose inclusion in any such distribution of honours is confidently looked for by the public; the names for example, of Viscount Kodama, Viscount Ito (of Yalu fame), General Nogi, General Terauchi, &c. When the war began General Kodama already held the rank of Baron and he was promoted to be Viscount quite recently with explicit reference to his Formosan services. At the time of the latter promotion the general understanding was that the Emperor desired to accord the title of Count to this distinguished officer in connexion with the War, but that as promotion from the rank of Baron direct to that of Count would have been unprecedented the honour on account of Formosa was expressly interpolated. As to General Terauchi, there can be no second opinion about his great deserts, and we confidently look for him to receive the title of Viscount at least. But the fact seems to be that the list of the Yorōzu includes chiefly non-combatant officers and officials.

General Baron Nishi has been appointed Chief of the Committee which is to consider and report upon questions relating to army reorganization. It is understood that the lessons of the recent war are very numerous. The Japanese came out victorious and have no reason to complain of their system so far as the general public can judge. But that does not seem to be the opinion of their own experts. On the contrary, the trial of fire and steel is said to have exposed numerous defects and there will be no hesitation in correcting them. Land and water transport, accounts, sanitation and education are spoken of as the main objects of reform. But if our readers have followed the gist of many references to this subject appearing of late in the vernacular press and translated in our columns, they will know that the new committee's investigations are to extend to wider fields than those here indicated. General Terauchi, in his instruction to General Nishi, speaks of not a few reforms indicated by the experiences of the recent war, and says that the various branches of the service will each submit memoranda embodying its views as to the changes required in its own department, which memoranda it will be the duty of the Committee to examine and report on.

The Asahi says that suggestions from Staff officers concerning improvements and re-organizations suggested by the experiences of the recent war have poured into the hands of the Authorities and that a quantity of most useful information has thus been obtained. One question already decided is that a strong force of field artillery armed with quick-firers must be organized. The Russians appear to have taken the lead in this matter. They have resolved, it is said, to attach 17 batteries of 8 guns each to their railway-guards in Manchuria. On the Japanese side there has been much discussion as to whether such artillery should be an independent corps, or whether it should be attached, and, if attached how attached. The strength of a battery has also given rise to divergence of view. The final decision is said to be in favour of attachment to Divisions, and of batteries consisting of 8 guns, but as to the number of batteries with a Division nothing is said. We find the Asahi's statement a little incredible. Our contemporary speaks of Russia's "army garrisoning" Manchuria (chuton-gun). But Russia is not to have any such army. She is to have railway guards only, and their number can scarcely exceed ten thousand. Are these ten thousand to comprise an artillery force of 136 guns? That would be an extraordinary proportion.

The loss of the Toyotomi Maru has directed attention to the question of marine mines in the neighbourhood of Vladivostok. These seems to have been a great deal of supineness in clearing the northern seas of these obstructions. It will be remembered that in reply to a Russian application the Japanese commander-in-chief in Manchuria stated, on the 9th of last November, that 790 Japanese mines had been strewn in the Vladivostok avenues, and indicated clearly the positions of the mines. The public has never been informed as to the number placed by the Russians in the same waters, but it must have been very considerable. During the course of the present year not more than 50 of these mines have been removed so far as Japanese records are concerned, namely, 17 up to February and 30 subsequently. There is very manifest danger to navigation and ships naturally show much shyness about approaching Vladivostok. That is mainly Russia's business, however. Experience shows that Russian sailors are remarkably skilful in handling these weapons of destruction, they lay them easily and remove them with exceptional facility. It is possible, therefore, that their clearing operations may already have been far more thorough than is generally supposed. If so, the fact might be published with much advantage.

The new programme of horse improvement in Japan is to be divided, we read in the Nichi Nichi Shinbun, into two periods. The first will cover 18 years; the second, 12. During the former 1,500 brood-mares, the property of private individuals, will be crossed by 1,500 sires, the property of the State, and a large stock of fine cattle will thus be raised. During the second period, the limits of the programme will be extended so as to include all the mares in the country—presumably, however, there will be some process of differentiation—and with that object the number of stud farms will be increased to 15. The expenditures contemplated during the first period are 30 million yen. This statement is very much in outline, and as the term tanuuma is used indiscriminately in both of its senses, there is difficulty in following the exact meaning.

The Japanese commissioners delegated to delimit the frontiers of Russia and Japan in Saghalien, reached Korsakoff on the 12th instant and set out for Alexandrovsky the next day, arriving there on the 14th. The first meeting of the country's commissioners took place in the latter town on the 15th, and the work of surveying will commence immediately. Colonel Oshima is the head of the Japanese party.

A telegram from Shanghai to the Jiji Shimpō relates that for the first time in Chinese history a coin is to be struck bearing the effigy of the Sovereign. The cause assigned for this step is a report from the Viceroy of Szchuan, who said that in consequence of the circulation in Tibet of coins stamped with King Edward's head, British influence had received a marked impetus in that region. He recommended that the Chinese Government should enter the field with a similar weapon, and the idea being endorsed in Peking, a silver rupee and a half-rupee bearing the effigy of Emperor Kangsu have been struck for circulation in Tibet. This is a very interesting effort of competition, but it sounds exceedingly un-Chinese, and we should like some better authority than that of Shanghai.

Tokyo journals publish an account of Mr. Nomura Shojiro's singular experiences in attempting to open business in the Transvaal. It appears that, desiring to establish a fine-arts store in Johannesburg, he sent his stock of goods thither, proceeding himself to Durban where he did not anticipate any difficulty in obtaining a pass-port, the only condition imposed by the Authorities being that whereas Europeans or American can procure this document by merely signing their names, an Asiatic is required to give the impress of his thumb for purposes of identification. The process is somewhat humiliating but Mr. Nomura was quite prepared to comply. He could not get his passport, however. We are not told why, but it appears that at first some change of procedure was pretexted, and that subsequently a flat refusal was given. Meanwhile the merchandise arrived at Johannesburg where, in the absence of its owner, the customs authorities were about to put their own valuation on it. Not until 2 months had elapsed, and then only by the aid of a press campaign, was Mr. Nomura able to gain admittance to the country.

PHOTOGRAPHIC EXHIBITION.

An exhibition of photographs was opened on Monday and remains open to-day at the Men's Reading Rooms, No. 82 Settlement. There is a large collection of works of varying merit—many of very high quality—and it is well worth a visit.

In landscapes the first prize was given to Mr. O. M. Poole for a photograph of Fuji, Mr. A. W. S. Austen receiving the second prize and honourable mention with only one mark less for a study of a quiet valley. Mr. O. M. Poole also won first and only prize in the portraits section with "a portrait of Miss H.," and first prize in the seascapes with "Between voyages." In the latter class Mr. E. R. Ford took second prize with a photograph taken near Dushii. Among instantaneous works Mr. E. J. Moss, Jr., was first with a dog disporting himself in water, and Mr. A. W. S. Austen was second with a snapshot of launches at the English Hatoba. In collections of pictures illustrative of tours Mr. E. J. Moss, Jr., was again first and he secured the same place for an "interior" a view of part of Christ Church. Messrs. G. Brinkworth and K. van R. Smith acted as judges.

A pleasant couple of hours' social intercourse and entertainment were afforded to members of the Association and guests at the rooms of the Yokohama Men's Reading Room Association on Wednesday afternoon from 5 to 7. The collection of photographs taken in connection with the competition inaugurated by the Association, and the prizes given to the successful competitors, were on view in one of the rooms and attracted a considerable number of visitors, while in another room the lady friends of the association dispensed tea and coffee, etc., to the guests and members. During the evening a most enjoyable programme of music added to the pleasure of the visitors, in the course of which Mrs. Dearing gave a very expressive recitation of the relief of Lucknow in the Indian Mutiny, and Messrs. L. D. Tebb and Mr. S. H. Somerton contributed two and three songs respectively, Mrs. K. Wilson kindly accompanying Mr. Tebb's songs, while Mr. Somerton played his own accompaniments. One of the latter songs—by special request—was the old favourite, "The Yeoman's Wedding" song.

FUNERAL OF MR. DAVID BECKER.

The remains of Mr. David Becker, who died on the 14th instant at his residence No. 140 Bluff, were interred on Friday afternoon in the Yokohama Cemetery. The ceremony was attended by a large company of mourners. Mr. Becker, whose death at the age of 43 from consumption was deeply lamented, enjoyed wide respect and practically the whole French colony as well as many others were in attendance to pay their last tribute to him.

The pall-bearers were Messrs. H. Blum, Lee Meyer, C. Bretschneider, F. Dietz, U. Odin, and Gustav Rosenthal, the chief mourners being Messrs. G. Allcot, J. Weill, I. Bickart, etc. There were many beautiful floral tributes.

THE BOOKSHELF.

A Text-book in the History of Education, by PAUL MONROE, Ph.D., New York. The MacMillan Company, Price $2.50.

THE Teachers College in New York City, is a department of Columbia University, and is essentially a school of Pedagogy. It is naturally academic in its methods, which have been very properly criticized as being not sufficiently practical but it is an institution which could well be imitated in this country, for it is something more than a Higher Normal School, because the profession of teaching is there treated with all the dignity that it deserves and pedagogy is considered to be an occupation which is big with possibilities in other ways than mere giving lessons. The writer of this book fills the chair of the History of Education in that college, and while he betrays in his work some of the ultra-academic spirit which is conspicuous in all that his college does, he treats his subject in a way that commands respectful attention from all who are engaged in educational work not merely as a means of livelihood but with a full realizing sense of the obligations they have assumed, and of their duty to themselves as well as to those they wish to instruct. It is perhaps rather severe to say that this book is somewhat "over the heads" of many teachers in Japan but there are many foreign teachers who will be glad to have had some one put before them such a history; and there are not a few Japanese educationalists who are all that the word implies, and they will welcome the book: because, while it may be a truism and therefore should be an unnecessary statement, there are a good many people, even among those actually teaching, who have but hazy information as the evolution of Education.

Before considering the character of the task which the author has set himself and the professional way he treats his subject, which he has, speaking generally, handled well, we must comment somewhat adversely upon his literary workmanship and style. It is to be hoped that Professor Monroe's pupils will not take him too precisely as their model in English composition, for his manner of expressing himself at times leaves much to be desired; slips in grammar and syntax occur too frequently to permit of our attributing them to careless proof-reading. It is, we believe, recognized as a fundamental rule in serious English composition, that a book shall begin with a brief statement of what it is intended to demonstrate; that it advances in the exposition; and that it ends with the climax. Similarly, each chapter shall be divided, broadly speaking, into three parts; the announcement, the exposition, the conclusion. Again, that each paragraph shall be arranged in the same orderly fashion, as nearly as may be. That throughout, the strongest statements shall come next to the strongest punctuation. The proper regard for these rules for construction results in that "economy of attention on the part of the reader," which Herbert Spencer so stoutly contends for. To these rules, Professor Monroe has not adhered; for many of his paragraphs are totally lacking in that logical sequence which ought to characterize the work of a writer who announces his intention to give something more than a superficial outline containing a summary of trite generalizations. To scientists in all parts of the world it will seem very careless in Professor Monroe to speak of the Smithsonian "Institute," for the Secretary of that establishment for the increase and diffusion of knowledge among men, is most particular to adhere to the wish of the founder that it should be known as "The Smithsonian Institution."

Professor Monroe properly begins his task with a consideration of primitive education and discusses its significance, the dominant characteristics of primitive life, that is animism, the determining factors of the education of primitive man in his social environment, and then passes on to the crude methods of primitive education. In this chapter he draws upon works of the recognized authorities in the study of primitive man, and has gathered together his material in an interesting introduction, from which he passes on to the oldest, Oriental, education. Here, to our mind, he attaches too much importance to the Chinese conception of education and to the methods which have been followed so slavishly in that country. We recognize the tremendous influence—in the main for good—of those educational methods, but we are close enough to them to see how dangerous they have been and still are in their rigidity. Professor Monroe seems to have some appreciation of this fact, for at the end of his chapter on Chinese education, he bears testimony to its insufficiency for modern uses in admitting the rapidity with which the Japanese have modified their ancient social structure and assimilated the culture of Western civilization, chiefly by means of the adoption and possible improvement of the ideas and methods of Western education, as indicating "the extent to which the characteristics of Oriental society are due to the established education rather than to inherent racial traits."

Then, in regular order, the author treats of Greek, Roman, and Middle Ages education, but space does not permit of anything more than a mention of those chapters. They contain an accumulation of historical and special facts bearing upon the general subject of the book which are extremely interesting, not only to the professional educationalist, but equally to those who look upon themselves as being merely superficial students of mankind. The author's explication of the origin of universities, which forms subdivision six of the chapter on the Middle Ages, although it contains nothing new, distinctly has that charm which is perennial, of presenting old facts in a new and attractive way. The same may be said of his presentation and definition of the Renaissance and of Humanistic education: and from this chapter we get an insight into that beginning of education which is directly connected with our modern systems, although it sometimes requires such a book as this to make us realize the fact. Just at the middle of the book, the author takes up the Reformation, Counter-Reformation, and the Religious Conception of Education, and from this point on to the very end of the volume, there is not a page that can be skipped by any teacher. At their proper dates, chronologically, the modern founders of the educational systems of Europe are treated in an effective way, furnishing a veritable encyclopaedia of technical information which should be at the command of everyone who has ought to do with kindergartens, private, primary, preparatory, or higher schools, or universities. It will be somewhat surprising, we fancy, to many teachers to read of the influence for good upon education that was exercised by Montaigne, Rousseau, Rabelais, and several others whose names, in ordinary literature, do not always connote the cultivation of good morals or discreet education. One of the many attractive features of this book, is the way in which such men, who were greater or smaller giants in educational matters, as Erasmus, Milton, Mulcaster, Rathke, Comenius, Pestalozzi, Herbart, and Froebel are brought together and compared. It helps one to realize more readily under what conditions the present systems of education of Europe were begun, fostered, and developed, than anything we have ever seen hitherto. The book is a thick one, it contains more than seven hundred pages of matter; and it is not a cheap work by any means. This latter fact tends to put it beyond the reach of most of our teachers; but it is a book which ought to be in the library of every middle school in Japan, and of course in all the higher educational institutions; and we hope that, if it is not already known to them, what we have said may induce the officials of the Mombusho to examine it carefully, for we are convinced that if it is given such an examination, our opinion of its value as a reference book will be endorsed. We cannot, as yet, recommend it in terms of its title as a "text-book," for pedagogics in Japan are not upon such a high plane as to make it possible for any teacher or professor to use it as such or to gather about him a class that could make such use of it.

Odds and Ends; Aids to English Conversation. First Steps in English Conversation.

THESE two books appear to have been published respectively in 1906 and 1905 though both have come under our notice simultaneously. Their author is Miss Summers of Tsukiji, in Tokyo, a lady who by many years of able and assiduous work has won a high reputation as a teacher of English. The former volume—volume is scarcely an appropriate term, for neither of the two publications exceeds the dimensions of a pamphlet—is compiled on a very simple system. A number of groups of sentences are given, each based on a short vocabulary. The vocabulary alone is translated into Japanese, the illustrative phrases being in English only. There are no explanations. Evidently the object of the authoress is merely to collect for the information of Japanese students some hundreds of sentences which, though used commonly enough in daily life, are not to be found in any easily accessible book. The selection appears to have been well thought out, and on the whole we should say that these examples will be of great service. Only to a Japanese who already possesses some knowledge of idiomatic English, however. For instance, how could an ordinary student follow the idiom in such phrases as:—"There is no love lost between these two children." "I don't see my way to doing so now." "They are always taking French leave." "It was a case of touch and go with us." Then again there are occasional uses of slang which do not commend themselves, as:—"If things pan out as I expect them to do." "It is better than carrotty hair." "It's all to pieces." "You never see her but what she's darnin' the children's socks." But it must be noted that these peculiarities are few and far between, and that the phrases as a whole are sound specimens of precisely the kind of English one hears in the every-day conversation of Englishmen but does not find in readers or grammars. Considerable assistance is also rendered to the learner by grouping cognate words in each vocabulary so that the student learns not only their uses but also their distinctions. "The First Steps in English Conversation" is constructed on a different plan. It is a series of lessons, each consisting of a collection of English phrases with Japanese equivalents, and the English words having their pronunciations marked in Kana. Evidently Miss Summers does not approve of any appeal to the reasoning faculties in teaching a language. She proceeds by the method of rote only. Thus the first two sentences of the first lesson are:—"How do you do?" and "It's very warm, isn't it?" To analyse such phrases so as to make a beginner understand their constructions and the processes they represent would be a mighty task: he must take them for granted and be content to familiarize himself with their meaning only. That is one way of teaching, many people approve of it, and in the hands of a skilled teacher it doubtless does very well. If, for our own part, we have never liked it, that does not prevent us from appreciating that the lessons compiled by Miss Summers are very good of their kind. Again in this volume, however, we find occasional traces of slang. A learner in his second lesson is taught to say "mum" for "madame," and in his fifth he is told to speak of his father and mother as pater and mater. Sometimes, too, the Japanese translations do not appear to be just renderings of the English. For example, we doubt whether "It must be dear" is well rendered by takai ni chigai nai; "Is he fierce?" by kuitsukimasuka; "You are welcome to it" by agemasho; or "Can I be of any assistance to you?" by anata dōka nasainashita ka. These are small blemishes, however, and we frankly think that "First Steps in English Conversation" ought to prove a boon to many students.

"The Nelsonian."

One of the keenest delights an Old Boy can ever hope to experience, if he be of normal tastes and appetites and still loves his alma mater, is to receive from time to time copies of the school magazine. In glancing through its pages he can renew the delights of his boyhood, can revisit the Arcadian shore whereon he disported with the best of all possible school fellows, can mingle again in the strenuous, generous-hearted life which pulsates through classroom, dormitory and play-ground, and in the pages devoted to the Old Boys can discover what sundry of the friends of his schooldays are doing and how "wears the weather" with them. The Nelsonian is a typical school magazine, being the organ of Nelson College, New Zealand. All the well-known features of such a journal are seen in its pages, photographs, athletic groups, notes on term work, the sports of the school, the prizes won in the scholastic arena, the objects for attainment set before the different forms; the debates in the different rooms—all find place. Here and there we find a paragraph which sends us back to the days when writing a satirical paragraph for the school magazine was a fearsome but delightful adventure, as witness the following:—

Custom cannot stifle the infinite variety of the solitary cornet that maketh music for the idle ear in the School of Music. It lifts up its brassy voice in the near annexe and is vocal afar off. First a quavering tone and then a blare. The lungs at the back of it could run a trombone, and a blurred note is a foible beneath attention. Away he sails on the waves of sound and, missing stays, brings to in mid career. A mood of reckless dissipation seizes on his soul and he riots through 'Ta-ra-ra-boom-de-ay' and the gamut of popular snatches, in 'Ereles vein. Anon he sways his blasts to gentle moods and essays the severely classical only to subside in muffled snorts and wails as of lost souls in Dantean limbo. Truly a player of many parts, whom the long-suffering master curseth as the quavering strains steal athwart his vexed soul.

The Day-boy who contributed that paragraph made himself scarce, we imagine, for a day or two after publication day. He has a pretty vein of satire which, however, should be cultivated with discretion.

Nelson College celebrates its Jubilee this year. The first school buildings, formally opened in October, 1861, were destroyed by fire on the 7th December, 1904, and the new buildings which take their place are expected to be all completed by the end of the present year. The school occupies a high position in the scholastic world of Australasia and many of its pupils have passed direct into Sandhurst and from thence into the Indian and Imperial armies.

Children of Far Cathay, by CHARLES HALCOMBE, Printed and published at the Hongkong Daily Press Office.

MR. HALCOMBE rightly calls this book "a social and political novel." He is a determined enemy of the Tartar dynasty now reigning in China and an equally determined friend of the Chinese people. Both sentiments are unequivocally expressed throughout this interesting volume, and their expression is so skilful that it will probably win a wide and sympathetic audience. The Tartar official is introduced in most repellent fashion. A taotai, Shun Ming, and a district magistrate, Seng Wui, represent by their modes of administration all the worst corruption, all the worst oppression and all the worst cruelty that have ever been attributed to Chinese officialdom by its most hostile critic; while a merchant, Hung Fong, his son, Cheng, and a scholar, Wong Ah-Chih, represent moral types of the highest kind. Herbert Montrose, a noble young Englishman, is an eloquent advertisement of his race's best qualities, but by way of contrast the reader is introduced to British officials in Hongkong who have become slaves of formalism at the expense of all instincts of humanity. There is a charming girl, Luh-wha who, with the help of Montrose, contributes a pretty episode of love, constant, unselfish and innocent, while, by way of foil, we catch a passing glimpse of the converse qualities in one Laura Rashley. As to the plot, our readers must follow it for themselves, and if they find it as interesting as we have, large success is ensured to the book in its rôle of novel. But serious persons will value it chiefly for the insight its pages afford into Chinese manners, customs, modes of thought and fashions of speech. Mr. Halcombe was formerly on the staff of the Imperial Maritime Customs and is now an honorary member of the China Reform Party. It may be assumed, therefore, that he is competent to depict Chinese character, but as to that we do not venture to pronounce an opinion. We notice, however, that the phraseology which he puts into the mouths of his Chinese heroes and heroines is very much "Anglicised," and since he asks the public to believe that three years' study can equip an Englishman to preach theology and to discuss politics in the Chinese language, it occurs to us that possibly he himself may not have fully sounded the depths of that exceedingly difficult tongue. There can be no question, however, that he has closely studied Chinese things, Chinese legends and Chinese superstitions, and thus his pages have a colour which is at once realistic and attractive. He believes that the dynasty now occupying the Dragon Throne will one day go down before the descendants of the Ming, and he believes that the insurrection destined to effect that change will have its origin in the two Kwang provinces, as the Taiping Rebellion had. One can easily see that he sympathises with the followers of Tien Wang and Chung Wang and that he does not at all sympathise with the policy which induced England and France to discard their pledges of neutrality and espouse the cause of the Tsing Government against these great leaders of men. That is a subject which once occupied the attention of all the foreign communities in the Far East, and divided public opinion very sharply. For our own part it has always seemed to us that any careful reader of history must fall into the manner of thought expounded by Mr. Halcombe, though we do not by any means go so far as to allege that China's national safety can not be secured or the prosperity and happiness of her people achieved without a change of dynasty. In what degree the face of Far-Eastern history would have been altered had Sir Frederick Bruce adhered to his originally expressed opinion that to support the Manchus was to "essentially lower British reputation," will probably remain for all time a topic for varying verdicts, even in the face of literature so suggestive as that of Mr. Charles Halcombe. But all will agree that the China of 1906 is very different from the China of 1863, and that, so far as human judgment can reach, the reforms now inaugurated in Peking would be checked, temporarily at any rate, rather than facilitated by an anti-dynastic insurrection. To pursue this topic might convey the impression that "Children of Far Cathay" is exclusively a political work. Such is not the case: its human interest in great, and even students of ethnology will be well repaid by its perusal. Those who have read the "T'ing Tien-K'woh" by Lin-le, published just forty years ago, will be disposed to think that in this little known work the embryo of Mr. Halcombe's story may be found, but whereas the one professes to be a true and accurate history, the other does not claim to be anything more than a romance.

THE LEGEND OF THE DANCE.

BY UNKICHI KAWAI.

'Twas a day in spring most bright and beautiful,
Luminous the air and wonderfully soft,
A maid celestial downward came to earth,
Leisurely floating in her feathered robe,
Upon the silken rays of the spring sun.

To the right doth Holy Fuji high uprear
His mighty tower of snow perpetual;
The beach of Tago to the left outspreads
Her gown of satin widely in the sun;
Bedecked with dancing pines, doth wave-washed
Mio
Thrust a long arm into the purple sea.

On this blest beach, amid the graceful pines,
The Maid celestial lighted first on earth.

Now, only the white cone rests in mid sky,
Hung as an "opened fan" in heaven's blue,
The azure body lost in th' azure vault,
Look up: For Holy Fuji teacheth man
To crave and seek for heavenly things immortal,
Leaving the dust and care, the world below.

Now, fleecy mists, like wreaths of incense smoke,
Come curling, curling over highest peaks,
And reach at length the feet of Holy Mount,
In humble act of worship; costly, yea,
The costliest of all earth's costly things.

On Mio-no-matsubara's coral beach
The wavelets murmur every day, agog
In hope to mirror fair the bending pines
And sacred likeness of the Peerless Mount:
And limn'd liquid colours bear they back
Each day a myriad pictures of the scene
To adorn the Palace of Otohime,
The fairest daughter of the Dragon-king.

Of Heaven though she was, the Maiden found
The scene most fair, most witching fair, and she,
Hanging her robe of feathers on a bough,
Walked lightly on the smoothly-beaten beach,
In admiration rapt, among the pines
Forgetful of her waiting home above.

A fragrance more than earthly fills the air,
A wond'ring fisher lad on home intent.
Sees hanging on a branch a beauteous robe,
A robe of feathers, takes it down and tucks
It 'neath his arm, and as he homeward wends, Thinks what a stroke of luck is his, and how
This robe shall be an heirloom to his line.

The maiden saw it from afar, and sped,
In fear and trembling after him and cried
To him as softly as the moon-beams fall:
"Mine is the robe, O prithee, let it be;"
"The robe is thine, sayst thou? What proof hast thou?"

"Trust me, the thing is mine, and can belong
Only to one, a denizen of Heav'n."

"Woe be to me, if I steal aught divine.

I yield the robe. But pray thee, in return,
Grant me one boon. May I not see thee dance?"

Thrice happy he, the man who once hath seen
A maid celestial dance—so runs of old
A legend of Japan—for such a one Shall blessed be with peaceful life and long.

"Right gladly will I dance, and thou shalt see
A dance of heav'n; but, first, to me return
The feathered robe that I may dance in it."
"I doubt thee maiden; when thou donn'st thy robe,

Thou'lt fly away, and leave me here repining,
Bereft of robe and dance, so precious, rare."
"Alone with mortal men doubt has a place; Lies and Deception are not found in Heaven."
"Black shame on me; of earth am I, forgive, Take thou thy rainbow robe and do thy will."

Soon she was floating in her magic robe,
Poised o'er the pines, that grew in myriad shapes.
As slowly down she swept upon the sand,—
The coral sand that stayed the sea's advance,—
Her every motion showed a godlike grace:
From her the eagles learned how to soar.
Lightly she fluttered o'er the whisp'ring waves,
Turning, returning, flinging wide her sleeves:
The swallows for their wings the lightness seized.
Easy and beautiful to see the curves
She made in pirouettes from pine to pine:
From her their grace the maids of Nihon draw.
Her face was lustrous with the light of heaven;
Unearthly fragrance from her robe exhaled.

Upon the velvet strand, 'neath Fuji's shade,
Among the pines of Mio, by purple waves,
Left she the fisher lad amazed and dazed
Who saw the wondrous grace of Dance Divine.

The graceful art was handed down by him
To all the dancers of this beauteous land.

'Twas a day in spring, most bright and beautiful,
Luminous th' air and wonderfully soft,
In robe of feathers clad, a heav'nly maid,
Most leisurely went floating up the sky,
Upon the silken rays of the spring sun.

INDIAN SYMPATHY FOR THE FAMINE.

The fourth contribution by Indian sympathizers towards the relief of the famine in the North Eastern Districts has been received by the Relief Association through the Mitsui Bussan Kaisha as follows:—

ENGLAND AND AMERICA.

It seems to be the general opinion in Europe that England and America are drawing closer to each other every year. The causes of estrangement which existed during the latter half of the nineteenth century are gradually being removed and during the past few years American visitors have been swarming over to England in such numbers that at certain seasons of the year the available steamer accommodation has been quite insufficient. Last autumn there were hundreds of Americans in London who were compelled to wait weeks in order to secure a passage back across the Atlantic, and the number of Englishmen who cross to the States is reported to be continually on the increase. During the past six months several interesting articles on the relation, of the two countries to each other have appeared in English magazines. From these we purpose culling certain rather striking passages. It has always seemed to us that in the history of the great American Republic there is nothing more remarkable than the assimilative power she has displayed. America may be compared to a big giant which decade after decade has been masticating, and assimilating, European flesh of all sorts. Germans, Italians, Poles, Irishmen, Dutchmen, Spaniards, Norwegians, Danes and others have all been thoroughly transmuted into Anglo-Saxons. So far has the assimilation gone that the settlers in the States have for the most part lost all interest in the affairs of their native countries and have become patriotic Americans. Considering the multiform nature of the material dealt with, the whole history of the world supplies no such striking instance of rapid assimilation as that which America has furnished during the past hundred years. What surprises onlookers not a little is the manner in which America has retained amid so many neutralizing and undermining influences her essentially English character. The main characteristics, the great institutions, even the manners and tastes of the American people are all English. The chief offices of State have been all along principally filled by men of English descent. In an article contributed to the Nineteenth Century and After by Mr. Cyprian A. G. Bridge entitled "A Great Moral Upheaval in America" the following statements occur. "Attempts have sometimes been made to demonstrate that the English element—using the word English here in a general sense—has been swamped by the immense infusion of non-English elements into the population of the United States. Facts are against this contention. The necessity of acquiring the English language, of becoming acquainted with virtually English laws, and of submitting to what in essence are English constitutional arrangements has secured the predominance of the English-speaking race in the country. The wit and eloquence for which Americans are so famous came largely from the Irish strain in their blood, mixture with the latter gifted race exercising a powerful influence on the spiritual side. So, too, the commercial aptitude so widely displayed in the United States may be traced, together with other fine qualities, to Scottish ancestry.

"The predominance just mentioned has existed throughout the history of the people, and still exists. Out of twenty-six Presidents all but two could trace their ancestry to the British Isles, the two exceptions being of Dutch descent—Van Buren and Roosevelt. It is the same in the case of the Vice-Presidents. Every Chief-Justice of the Supreme Court, from the foundation of that dignified tribunal, with a single and that a doubtful exception, has borne an English name. Vagaries of spelling and pronunciation lead to corrupt lessons in patronymics and genealogies as they do in other compositions, and a name originally foreign may occasionally take an English form. For instance, the American family of Dabney, an appellation which looks English enough, is really a branch of the distinguished French family of D'Aubigny. Therefore in fixing the descent of an American house it is necessary to guard against the risk of assigning to it a wrong nationality. In the present investigation, doubtful, as well as obviously foreign, patrony-mics will be separated from the rest, these last only being counted as English.

"The nine living Justices of the Supreme Court, whose appointments cover a period of nearly thirty years, all bear English names. Out of twenty-seven judges of the United States Circuit Court twenty-three, and out of ninety United States District Court Judges seventy-nine are shown by their names to be of English descent. There have been thirty-four different occupants of the Speaker's chair in the House of Representatives at Washington. Of their names twenty-six are undoubtedly English. Within the last twenty years out of nine Secretaries of State only one has borne a non-English name. In the present Congress, amongst ninety Senators only twelve, and amongst 386 Representatives only 10 appear to be of other than English origin. The same may be said of twenty out of twenty-two general officers on the active list of the army and of twenty-two out of twenty-six Admirals.

"We find similar conditions when we leave the lists of Federal authorities. No less than thirty-five out of forty-five Governors of States are of English lineage; whilst out of 103 Mayors of the larger cities only 29 have non-English names. This is highly significant, because, as has been often pointed out, immigrants of Continental-European origin flock into the cities. The English predominance is also to be found in the higher classes of the great business institutions of the Republic. For example, out of 109 banks in New York—cosmopolitan as its commerce is—and Brooklyn 76 have presidents with names indicating their English descent. It might have been expected that in the highest academic posts in the United States representatives of the English element in the population would be outnumbered by those who descend from nations credited with greater aptitude for scholastic pursuits. It is not so, however, for 316 out of 314 universities and colleges are presided over by scholars whose ancestry must be looked for in the United Kingdom. "The above figures prove either that the English proportion of the population of the American Republic greatly outnumbers the remainder, which, in view of the varied immigration of the last half century, would indicate superior racial vigor, or that the English proportion, if not numerically stronger must be incomparably more influential. That element is becoming more rather than less English. The physical type, as already noted, is approximating to that in the old country. The tall, lanky, thin-visaged American of the conventional pictures has disappeared. His successor is at least as stoutly built as the conventional John Bull. Changes in the mode of life of Americans bring it into closer resemblance to our own. Love of specially English sports is now widespread."

If the Americans have, as is alleged above, derived their vein of humour from the Irish, a large number of them have also received from the same source a strong anti-English sentiment. But in recent years this sentiment has been gradually weakening, thanks to the growth of general enlightenment, to travel and to a closer study of English life by Americans. A few months ago a dinner was given in New York to the Governor-General of Canada. On that occasion Mr. Root, the American Secretary of State, an extremely able and cautious statesman, made a remarkable speech in which he declared that in fact, if not in name, the United States and England may be regarded as allies. Here are his exact words. "The traditional policy of the United States forbids alliances with other countries, but every lawyer knows, every man of affairs knows, that the signature and seal upon a contract are of little value unless the character and the purpose of the contractors are sincere. And with a sincere and genuine contract of purpose, if not of paper, our relations are sealed as effectively as they might be by a formal agreement." Commenting on this speech the London Spectator says:—"Instinctively the two branches of the Anglo-Saxon race are coming to realise that they must necessarily stand together for ideals in which they believe so profoundly,—ideals which are directly menaced by the great military autocracies of the world."

The negation of militarism, autocracy and dynasticism makes Britain and the United States natural allies, and would draw us together even if a common tongue, common ties of blood, and common ideals, moral, social and literary had not already brought us so close." There was a time when Canada was regarded with unfriendly eyes by a large section of the people of the United States and when there were those who whispered that the time would come when it would be annexed by the Great Republic. This feeling has passed away and so there was nothing undiplomatic or wild about the words bearing on the relations of Canada to the States uttered by Lord Grey at the dinner given in his honour. "If," said Lord Grey, "the nineteenth century belonged to the United States, the twentieth century belongs to Canada. Yes, gentlemen, this is the stimulating faith held by the people whom I represent. Any idea of the possible annexation of Canada by the United States is scouted by us as an impossibility as great as you would regard the annexation of the United States by Canada." These words caused no resentment. They were, on the contrary, cheered by the distinguished Americans who listened to them. On this great change in American sentiment towards a neighbouring British colony the Spectator very aptly remarks:—"With the strength and solidarity of the Union, and with the sense of the possession of wealth, numbers and prestige possessed in the same degree by no other country in the world, has come also that tolerance and fair-mindedness which belong to those who are not only great, but know and understand their greatness. While America was still raw and young she had in her a certain jealousy and intolerance of other peoples which sometimes seemed to make her resent their strength and patriotism as if they were things injurious to herself. Nature never gives the young, either in individuals or communities, the supreme touch of kindness,—the complete respect for the rights of others. In the exulting splendour of youth there is too often a flourish of insolence. . . . As her greatness and her responsibilities have increased she has come to understand that the world is big enough to hold others beside herself, and that it is a moral, and not a merely material, equality that makes nations respect each other. . . . Americans used to complain of Canadian insolence, but they were apt to forget that the remedy for this evil, if it existed, lay in their own hands. The bigger a man or a nation is, the more necessary is it to offer precedence in the battle of courtesy."

Among the many influences that are contributing to a better understanding and closer intercourse between Englishmen and Americans are the Rhodes' Scholarships. One of the American scholars now studying at Oxford a Mr. Stanley Royal Ashby a few months ago contributed to Macmillan's Magazine a charming article on the effect of Oxford University life on the mind of an American. His view is that the kind of training that a man gets there is not to be had anywhere in the United States. On the special features of this training he dwells at some length. What he says on the general American view of games as compared with the typical English view seems to us so well put that we quote the whole passage. We may say in passing that our experience in Japan is that with a few exceptions the Japanese take the English view as to games and condemn the American. "Perhaps the most noteworthy feature of student life apart from studies is found in college athletics. At few other universities in the world, I venture to say, is the love for outdoor sports so general as at Oxford. This desire to be playing at something in the open air seems to be inherent in the nature of the upper-class Englishman, so that when he comes to Oxford, the home of healthy sport, he is truly in his element. The climate of England, far more than any climate in the United States, encourages these sports; for, although England has few but gray days for her people in winter, she has, as some one has well said, more 'out-of-door days' than almost any other land. College rivalry is also a stimulus. Since the comparatively small membership of each college is divided among so many different sports, it is highly desirable that each man should do what he can in some sport to uphold the athletic prestige of his own college among a score of rivals. Thus the man who does nothing in the way of athletics is severely condemned by college spirit; and this is as it should be.

"But this wide-spread popularity of these sports, though worthy of emulation at all universities, does not teach us Americans a lesson so much needed as does the manner of engaging in them. Nearly every one has heard of the recent interference of our President to check the brutality of our football game—a brutality that none of us can deny. Unhappily, it is this insane desire to win, instead of a sportsman-like love of the game for the game's sake, that pervades all our sports. The result is that the American athlete, unlike the Oxonian, cannot play his game in the afternoon merely as a little healthy diversion and to give himself a clearer head, but is so dominated by the lust of victory that all other thoughts are driven from his mind. Before the game his friends anxiously inquire if he has slept well, if his back is all right again, if the stiffness has left his leg, if he feels thoroughly fit,—the questions are innumerable. During the game the men of his college give vent to deafening yells, the ladies in their enthusiasm make the grand-stand a tumultuous sea of color with their waving pennants, and finally a band completes the inspiration by playing some lively tune that sets every nerve a-tingling. For the player this is the fiercest kind of joy. But the strain is too great. If his intellect be not permanently dulled, as some people declare it is, his thoughts, at any rate, are for long periods almost completely diverted from every other subject but his sport in a way that is deplorable. He had better be at Oxford where it is considered unsportsman-like and bad form to be too eager to win; nay more, where the balance between the man intellectual and the man animal is, in nearly every respect, better maintained." Mr. Ashby praises the tutor system of Oxford and tells us it has been recently adopted at Princeton. He thinks that the examination system of Oxford compels admiration. According to him no more perfect examinations than those conducted there are imaginable. "Oxford has reduced examination to a science." He finds little pedantry at Oxford. "Some of the most intellectual men of Oxford," he tells us, "far from making any parade of learning, are so unassuming that you would give them credit for only the most mediocre ability, until better acquaintance reveals them to you. Only the other day a friend was relating to me how he had disgraced himself by mistaking a learned don for a freshman. Again, anything like sentimental enthusiasm is chilled by its reception. The man who goes into raptures over things hardly exists here at all, and, if he did, he would probably be regarded with a quiet amused kind of tolerance that would bring him earthward with a thud. Of a piece with all this is the marked critical attitude of Oxford. One is tempted to say that there is such a keenness for seeing faults and foibles, that virtues are apt to be unjustly slighted. To destroy illusions, to show that idols are made of clay, and to demonstrate that all authorities are but erring human creatures, this seems to be a characteristic trend of the Oxonian's mind. I should say that these traits, in the main, are scholarly. They may be a trifle depressing to the stranger at first, but when he becomes accustomed to them, they give a stimulus to investigation, while encouraging original views rather than a blind reliance upon authority."

In the manner depicted above and in a hundred other ways are the two countries influencing each other, learning from each other, benefiting each other, and, best of all, getting to understand and appreciate each other. Writing on "American Manners" in Temple Bar Mr. Clarence Rook conclusively shows that what so many English travellers take for rudeness is mere curiosity. He expresses himself thus:—"In England two men who meet in a first-class railway carriage will glare at one another for several hours over their newspapers, each suspecting the other to be either a scoundrel or a cad. In America one of those two men would say—to put it crudely—'I'm a married man with two children. What did you pay for your boots?' The other would reply, 'Six dollars; and how do you make your living?'" An American always wants to know this; although it is almost the last thing about which an Englishman would ask. In England mutual reticence is the fashion. In America you find mutual frankness everywhere. Clarence Rook says with great truth:—"Every nation develops the manners that suit its mode of life; it is only the language that differs; and when you call a street sweeper in Paris monsieur and a street sweeper in Moscow a "pig," you are saying the same thing in different languages. The man who thought the language of Moscow, United States, (doubtless America has annexed Moscow as well as Rome, Memphis and Syracuse), would find speedy disillusion. And the Englishman who, priding himself on his reticence, resents the frank inquisitiveness of the casual American acquaintance is no linguist. He misses the chief joy of American travel." It is undoubtedly correct to say that as a rule the complaints of one nation against the manners of another have their origin in a misunderstanding. The stranger does not know the social language. He says one thing and the other man thinks something else is implied. The world's various misunderstandings are a perpetual source of friction and discord, but happily England and America are getting to know each other better every year.

CHINESE YOUNG MEN'S CHRISTIAN ASSOCIATION.

(COMMUNICATED.)

A great deal has been written of late about the Chinese students in Tokyo. That the Chinese students in Japan have received more public censure than they deserved may be true, but that there are some amongst them whose moral characters are decidedly bad should hardly be a matter of surprise. Absence of parental oversight, residence in a large town like Tokyo full of temptation and sin and amidst people whose social customs are very different and being duped by unprincipled boarding-house keepers amongst other causes tend towards the moral degeneracy of not a few of the Celestial students in the capital of Japan. The first Young Men's Christian Association was started in London a few scores of years ago to help young men in similar circumstances to keep to moral rectitude and wherever the experiment has been tried, in Europe, America or Asia, the Y.M.C.A., by providing healthy entertainment and amusement and splendid religious, moral and intellectual instruction has not only kept a good many young men from succumbing to temptation but been able to improve the general moral tone of young men. With such an object in view Mr. David Willard Lyon, of the National Committee of Young Men's Christian Associations in China, Korea and Hongkong, with a Chinese co-worker, made a tour of investigation in Japan and the result of his inquiries has led to the Chinese Y.M.C.A. being organised in Tokyo. Much progress has not been possible because of the difficulty of securing a building sufficiently big for the purpose, but as some rooms have been rented in the Japanese Y.M.C.A. building (which is shortly to be extended) better results may be looked for. On May 1st, an evening school was organised with four classes, with fifty students on an average in each class, to which a fifth class was added on June 1st with an enrolment of sixty students. Three Chinese and three foreign teachers, amongst the former being Mr. C. C. Wang, of Tientsin, who was a student of the Tientsin Y.M.C.A. school and was recently converted, have been engaged and the work of preparing the students for entrance into the different schools and teaching them English is in full swing. Mr. Fitch recently delivered a course of eleven lectures during three weeks, three of these were on science, three on patriotism and seven on religion. The lectures were ably interpreted in Chinese by Mr. C. T. Wang, the secretary of the Association, the attendance being in seven meetings more than 100, in one more than two hundred, the rest 40 each meeting, not, however, including the last in which more than one hundred and sixty were present and fifty converted. Bible Classes in English are being conducted on Sunday afternoons. Evening Bible Classes in English and Chinese are to be started very shortly and arrangements are being made to teach music and singing and hold itinerant meetings in the neighbourhood of the lodging houses of the Chinese students. Much social work has not been possible in this early stage but the Charity Concert held on the morning of the 10th proved a great success. The large auditorium of the Tokyo Young Men's Christian Association in Kanda together with its gallery was packed with Chinese young men, the Chinese Minister in Tokyo, some ten Chinese school girls and a few foreigners amongst others being present. Mr. C. C. Wang's opening address was very appropriate. He said: "A concert is usually an occasion of joy and happiness but to-day's concert is just the opposite. It is to extend our sympathy to the suffering brethren in Hainan, Kwangsi and Kiangsi where the recent floods have caused great misery and while we enjoy to-day's music and Rinetograph performances we should not forget the primary object of the concert." The next three items on the programme were: (1) a piano solo by Mr. C. C. Yen; (2) a chorus entitled "The Great Flood of the Three Provinces" in which some 20 students took part, and (3) another piano solo "Thoughts of Home" by Mr. Wang Ji Chow, were all exceedingly well rendered. Then followed Mr. C. T. Wang's short speech, which was truly eloquent. Mr. Wang said: China by right of her vastness of area, long standing as a free nation, early civilization, and the virility and capability of her sons ought to rank amongst the great Powers of the World. Instead of standing as such she is very low in the scale of nations: territories ceded, indemnities to pay: rights lost and people despised. It was due, he continued, not to the incapability of the Chinese people but to lack of union amongst the people which every one truly interested in China ought to lament. The climax had already been reached, he pointed out, and the boycott of American goods and such other things are significant of the masses getting more and more unified day by day. That morning's concert, he explained, was convened not only to raise funds to help the unfortunate sufferers in China but also to bring together the Chinese students from different provinces of China and gain the respect and esteem of the foreigners. He laid emphasis on the students making a common cause and working in unison. He then explained what a huge ideal the "Dragon" Flag presented to the Chinese people. He said the national flag of the Celestials was emblematic of greatness and power and the only way in which a nation can become truly great was for every one of its members to understand his individual responsibility and faithfully do his duty. During the latter part of Mr. Wang's speech some 30 Dragon flags were waved to and fro and the whole audience appeared to be carried away with the speaker's enthusiasm. This ended the first portion of the concert.

Part II of the concert commenced with a march and polka by Mr. Wangji Chow, followed by a chorus, "A Chinese Hero," and a piano solo by Mr. C. T. Yen, which were all beautifully rendered. Then Mr. C. C. Wang made a stirring appeal on behalf of the miserable people whom the recent floods in three Provinces of China have left homeless. The response was very generous: some 1,800 yen being collected or promised. The Rinetograph performance which wound up the concert was very interesting and all the people who had braved the nasty weather in going to the Y.M.C.A. Hall had a very enjoyable morning.

The Minister for Finance gave his consent on June 14th to the proposal of the Tokyo Electric Light Co. for the raising of a foreign loan of a half a million yen. According to Tokyo journals, the contract is to be made with the Anglo-American Debenture Corporation in London, the endorsement to be by Messrs. Bellamy and Isaacs, and the debentures to be issued by the William Deacons Bank. The price of issuing is yen 92 per 100, and the interest 5 per cent. The loan will be redeemed within fifteen years.

FAREWELL TO BARON D'ANETHAN.

His Excellency Baron d'Anethan was entertained by his friends of the Tokyo Club at a farewell banquet on the evening of the 20th instant in the Club building. The Baron is about to pay a visit to Europe but his return to Japan next year is confidently hoped for. Seventy covers were laid and among those present were their Excellencies the Ministers of Russia, Holland Italy, China and Siam, the Chargé d'Affaires of Germany, Mr. Lindley and Mr. Gubbins of the British Embassy, Mr. Laughlin and Capt. Marble of the United States Embassy, Count Coloredo of the Austro-Hungarian Legation, Count Hirose, Mr. A. D. Denison, Viscount Inaba, Baron Mori, Mr. Van der Polder of the Dutch Legation, Mr. Sonoda, Count Terashima, Dr. Thiel of the German Embassy, etc. The chair was taken by Mr. Tsuzuki Reiroku who proposed the health of Baron d'Anethan in a speech which was frequently interrupted by vehement applause. Mr. Tsuzuki said:—

YOUR EXCELLENCIES AND GENTLEMEN,—I rise simply to give expression to the feelings which I believe animate everyone of us here present, and I think I am interpreting those feelings correctly when I say it is with mingled emotions of sorrow for the parting with an old friend; of agreeable recollections of our mutual relations in the past; of sincerest wishes for a happy voyage homewards; of hopes for his speedy return here; that it is with those mingled feelings that we greet our honoured guest of the evening. Like everything we cherish most dearly in this life, we appreciate a friend most when he is going away from us, just as we rightly appreciate the boon of health or wealth only when we are weak or destitute. It is only on the morrow of the eve when we had enjoyed ourselves somewhat more than we ought to have done, when we had taken to ourselves more of the exhilarating stimulants than was proper for us to do, it is only on such a morning that we feel the existence of such a vitally important and yet habitually unobtrusive organ as the human head weighing down so dramatically upon our shoulders. It is so with friends. The best friend is usually he whose presence is so unobtrusive and yet so real and effective that he makes himself a part and parcel of your social being, that you feel the moment he is going away from you, and then you feel it profoundly. Especially is this the case with our friends in the diplomatic service. We often hear that the highest objective of a diplomatist shall be nothingness; in other words, that he should direct his efforts to making the relations of the country he represents to that to which he is accredited so smooth and so untroubled by any wave or ripple, that an outsider shall have an impression of dullness and uneventfulness, that he shall not be ever conscious of the strength and cordiality of the bonds which unite the two countries. What higher tribute can we pay to our honored guest than to appreciate the fact that he had been here for more than thirty years in the diplomatic service of his country, and that during the whole interval the mutual relations of the two countries have been such that we outsiders were often oblivious of the existence, nay of the vitality, of the friendly links which united us. Far from me the intention of speaking of his merits and services as a diplomatist. For that, there are more suitable quarters and more competent authorities than ours. For us it suffices if we give expression to the fact that it is on the eve of his departure that we most deeply feel the service he has rendered to the Club in the past. Five times has he been elected the Vice-president of this Club. Each time he fulfilled his functions to the satisfaction of all, and resigned them to the regret of all. It needs no mention of mine to see how much we owe to him for having enabled this Club to attain its present position among similar institutions of the country, the position of the first and the best managed club in the capital. Let us take this opportunity of repeating our heartfelt thanks for his services in the past. I refer to the past only in order to be able to prove to our guest how natural it is that we should feel so sorry at his approaching departure. He assures us that he is coming back very soon. We sincerely hope that his assurances may be realized, though we are not without apprehensions, as diplomatists almost invariably assure the uninitiated, that they are really coming back. That does not however mar or affect in any way the sincerity and the cordiality of our wishes for his happy voyage homewards, a happy and joyful reception in the bosom of his friends and his family, and for his speedy return to the country, which would be proud to serve him as his second place of nativity, and where his friends would be waiting for him with open arms. Let us hope also that he will throw away his hated rheumatism somewhere in the Indian Ocean, or in the Atlantic Ocean, or in some other neutral open sea, and return here refreshed and rejuvenated by his travels. Rest assured that during your absence, Excellency, we will miss you as much as the Baroness has been missed by all those who have known and admired her. Tell her that her friends are hoping that circumstances may permit her to return here with you. Tell your friends and your countrymen that all of us who have enjoyed the hospitality of your country like to look back on the agreeable days spent in the atmosphere of profound peace and enlightened freedom and the urbanity of of your country; that young students who have studied under the helping hand of Baron Lambermont, many of whom we count to-day among the members of this club, have almost all of them grown up to fill important functions in public life. Tell them all that underlying the deep friendship which we feel for the affable personality of your excellency, there is a widespread sympathy and admiration for Belgium, her people and institutions. I repeat I believe that it is with such mingled feelings as described that we all join in wishing a sincere bon voyage to your Excellency. I finish with the request to your Excellencies and gentlemen to join with me in raising your glasses to drink to the health of his Excellency Baron d'Anethan.

Baron d'Anethan, who on rising to reply was received with a round of cheers, said:—

EXCELLENCIES AND GENTLEMEN,—During the many years of my life that I have passed in Japan I am happy to have only pleasant recollections of the friends I count in this country; their number is great and I will always value and appreciate the repeated marks of sympathy they have shown to me in numerous circumstances. The large gathering of my friends who this evening have honoured me with such a cordial reception fills my heart with joy and I am happy and proud to see that they reciprocate towards me the sentiments of devotion and friendship that animate me and will always animate me towards them. I am glad to think that I am only going home on leave and before many months I hope and trust I will be able to resume my duties in Tokyo. Baroness d'Anethan, who loves and admires Japan as well and as much as I do, was obliged to go home some months ago, but had taken the precaution to secure her return ticket. So you see, my friends, it will not be the last dinner, I fear for you, that you shall have to offer me. This is the third time the members of the Tokyo Club have made me their honoured guest, and each time also I count more friends. How can I thank you as warmly as I should like? How can I express to you my deep and heartfelt gratitude? You know it is the privilege of old age to give advice; I am unfortunately arrived at that stage of life when, though I have still much to learn, my sad and difficult duty is to teach or rather to advise my youngsters. What I tell you tonight, and many of you I know think as I do, is: the Tokyo Club in its present condition must cease to exist! We ought to have in this progressing city, in the capital of this mighty Empire, the finest, the most comfortable, the most attractive Club! Everywhere in the East we see splendid Clubs, in Hongkong, Shanghai, Yokohama, Kobe, and Nagasaki. Those clubs are managed by a few foreigners and have not the help, with rare exceptions, of Japanese gentlemen. Is it credible that here in Tokyo our club that is composed of the most distinguished Japanese, the Corps Diplomatique, at least the greater part of the Corps Diplomatique, and the foreign gentlemen who come here to promote the interests of their countries, is it possible that we could not do as well as the clubs that are such a success elsewhere? I do not merely wish that we should do as well, I want us to do better! I wish and I earnestly urge you to second my efforts, that before long our club will be the model club in this part of the world, a club that will compare favourably with the best clubs of Europe. The reason I feel so keenly on the matter is that I consider, and on that point, my conviction is firm, no institution will strengthen more the relation of friendship between you and the foreigners who more and more come to Japan. We meet many of you, my friends, in official receptions, in state banquets, in splendid parties; your hospitality is boundless and we enjoy them much. But it is only in an international club like ours, that we learn to know each other more intimately. We are all in the club on the same footing; each member is as good as the other, and we are all equally at home. There is in a club a character, a feeling of comradeship that is not found elsewhere. Let us by all means and by every manner encourage that spirit of comradeship. We cease to be officials when we come to the Club; we come to meet friends and thus we work effectively. I repeat it, by a better acquaintance with each other to suppress the barriers that may occasionally separate people who only wish to be friendly to each other if only they have the chance to meet frequently. I think also that it is a necessity for Tokyo to have a fine international Club so that we shall be able to entertain the distinguished guests who from all countries of the world come to visit and admire Japan. Excuse me, gentlemen and friends if I have detained you so long but I think, at least I hope, I understand well, after my long experience of Japan, the true sentiments of your countrymen towards all the nationalities represented here, and therefore, I will be happy if I can, even for a small part contribute to promote the idea of the great mutual advantage that the creation of a new club will bring to us all. One word more, or rather a second piece of advice. You are more numerous to-night in the club than you'll ever be at a general meeting of the Club? If you agree with me, do not put off the composition of a special committee that will seriously and actively examine the question. Before I sit down allow me to thank you again most heartily for your splendid and cordial hospitality. An revoir; à bientôt!

"L'HOMME QUI RIT."

[WRITTEN FOR THE "JAPAN MAIL."]

The late Lafcadio Hearn, in one of his interesting studies of Japanese character and temperament, attached much importance to the fact that his observation had led him to discover something peculiar in the nervous laugh of this people, when brought face to face with such disaster as often causes regret and tears, or when, to cite his specific example, telling of the death of a relative. In this case, Hearn made the mistake of applying a general fact to a particular case, for all of us who have observed such matters carefully, have seen the same thing in every land under the sun; and it is not peculiar to any walk in life; from the highest to the lowest it is conspicuous in all who are of a nervous temperament, and means nothing more than that training and perhaps, although this is not by any means certain, more consideration for the feelings of others as well as restraint which makes them regard more seriously the impression upon others of their own actions, may make this particular form of nervousness less conspicuous in the upper classes than in the lower. In giving it another significance, Hearn made one of the mistakes that are by no means uncommon in his pen pictures of the Japanese; that kind of laughter does not mean indifference to the misfortune that has befallen the laugher, and it does not betaken pleasure. But may we not say that the Japanese people are naturally a laughter-loving folk? No precise answer is given here, because it is one that each should frame for himself yet we are inclined to think that if the Japanese do not literally obey the injunction, "Laugh and grow fat," they do owe somewhat of their usually good health to the ease with which laughter bubbles over their lips: and if it were generally understood how much the mere physical act of laughing contributes to actual bodily health, there might be more of it than of lamentation in the world, and farcical comedies prove more attractive to the invalid than physicians. We are quite aware that the fondness of the Japanese people for tragedy in histrionic performance, seems to contradict us, but when it is remembered that an audience in this country does not so often shed tears at the tragedy itself as at the sorrow which leads up to the tragic act, or which results as a consequence thereof, and is inclined to praise, even to laugh at, the hero of the tragedy, it may be that the fact confirms our opinion. We do not forget, either, that the old Puritans were bitterly opposed to laughter as militating against their peculiar ideas of Grace, and that notwithstanding their excessive solemnity, they were fairly long-lived, but that was rather to be attributed to their other form of sobriety, that in eating and in drinking, as well as to their generally good habits, which are assuredly commendable in all, even if all of us do not practice them seriously.

The old adage, "Laugh and grow fat," is founded upon a sound physiological basis. It is a conspicuous fact that fat men laugh easily: this is not because they are fat, but because they laugh so much that it helps to make them fat. Of course this is somewhat dangerously near a generalization, for in some cases fatness is the effect of and a sign of disease, but in normal conditions the very act of cachinnation is a health-giving one, and has a profound influence in provoking appetite,—are not most fat men valiant trencher knights? at in oxydisation of the blood,—who ever saw an anemic fat man unless he was one of those whose avoirdupois was due to some strange disease?—and to digestion,—how incompatible are fatness and dyspepsia; indeed, a good laugh helps the entire and complex process of nutrition.

The immediate physical results of indulgence in laughter are numerous. In the first place the very act of laughing involves the exercise of a large number of muscles, including many of those of the face, neck, chest, and abdomen, which are too liable to atrophy, but which, if they are exercised sufficiently, often become correspondingly well developed: as do also all the glands, blood-vessels, nerves, and other tissues in intimate connection with them. The facial muscles, for example, of the man who laughs often and easily, are generally developed to a degree which gives him the facial rotundity of a contented child. But some—and these are generally women who have an incorrect idea of personal appearance—say that laughter makes wrinkles and causes the face to grow prematurely old; this is not admitted by physiologists to be a fact, yet even it were a well established one, let us say with Gratiano: "With mirth and laughter let old wrinkles come!"

Laughter, and it cannot be too immoderate provided it stops short of rapturing a blood-vessel, is highly beneficial in its influence upon those two vital organs, the lungs and the heart. During what is called a "fit" of laughter, the lungs may be almost completely emptied of their contained air: show us the healthy man who does not envy the ability to burst out that way. Fresh air is then drawn in to the fullest extent of the lungs' capacity, inflating, perhaps, those little-used air-cells which previously contained only stagnant air and bacilli—for in the shallow breathing we ordinarily practice, comparatively large tracts of air-cells are not used. During this process, induced most pleasantly by a hearty laugh, the general circulation is accelerated, impure air is hurried out of the system and fresh air hurried in, and the palest, most distant air-cells are reddened and brought into active life, while whatever there may be of bacilli are destroyed, unless,—alas!—they are permanently and irremovably in possession as in advanced tuberculosis. Besides, that laughter which fairly makes the sides ache and cracks the ribs, is as good for the muscles of the diaphragm and the abdominal regions as is the most skilful massage, and the sort of kneading to which hearty laughter subjects them passes on its salutary influence to the liver and other organs which are too liable to torpor. It is not only mental merriment that is produced when people explode with laughter that makes them fairly twist and turn and bend themselves almost double as they "let themselves go," they are getting even more actual physical benefit than they might from a gymnasium lesson!

The "fool" is by no means the useless member of society that so many bigger fools, but they call themselves "serious-minded folk," consider him. If by his quips and pranks or his very impudence, he can make those laugh who are in danger from one of those curious toxins, which the body occasionally and mysteriously secretes from the food supplied it because of a torpid liver, he has done as much as the best physician could do and has done it in a better way. What is a "fit of the blues" but temporary indigestion or permanent dyspepsia, and if a "fit of laughter" can be induced a long step has been taken towards replacing an evil by a good. Chronic mental depression has often been absolutely cured by a course of treatment in which drugs have absolutely no part, for that which provokes laughter, frequent and hearty, acts promptly, acts cheaply, and does not demand a change of scene or of habit, sometimes, to make it efficacious.

But it is real, hearty laughter that is to be so warmly recommended, not the pleased chuckle that comes when one reads an amusing story to oneself, although even this is good in its degree; and because laughter is contagious, it is to be found in its preservative and curative forms in company. It is not because the spare, melancholy, and miserable looking man is thin that he seems to seek solitude, it is because solitude contributes so much to his disease of thinking of his own selfish ailments that he likes to be alone. A decent man in company eliminates himself in great measure and receives what others say while he tries to contribute his share to the common fund of entertainment, not to trot out his only little Ego all the time: offensive personality never yet characterised the speeches that have given a world-wide reputation to the best after-dinner entertainers of their kind. Is it not an indisputable fact that a man laughs more heartily when in company with others than he does by himself, no matter how humorous the book may be that he is reading, or how screaming may be the recollection of the funny incident that his memory recalls. The laughing habit is one, therefore, that is worth cultivating. It is a matter of everyday experience that one feels the better for a good laugh; an explosion of laughter being, in truth, a nerve-storm, comparable in its effect to a thunderstorm in Nature (on a very small scale), doing good by dissipating those oppressive clouds of care which sometimes darken the mental horizon. The Japanese people do like to laugh: let us imitate them in this as in other things that are not so serious as the arts of war.

THE OPEN DOOR IN MANCHURIA.

An interview dealing with matters of considerable interest has been published in the N. C. Daily News. It appears that much doubt has existed with regard to what the British Commercial Attaché saw or was shown during his recent official visit to Newchwang for the purpose of enquiring into the conditions of trade in Manchuria. Four Shanghai merchants therefore—Messrs. C. W. Wrightson, H. de Gray, L. Midwood, and J. R. Patterson—left that port on the 17th of last month to "ascertain the causes of the present difficulty of carrying on trade with Manchuria, and to learn whether or not the Japanese are making unfair use of their military occupation to place restrictions in the way of the traders of other nations." Their itinerary shows that the party travelled by rail from Chinwangtao to Ying-kon (Newchwang), where they remained two days, thence proceeded by rail to Liaoyang and after a day's delay on to Mukden, where the stay was somewhat longer. From Mukden they travelled overland in carts a distance of forty miles to Hsinmintun and from this point the railway brought them back to Peking and Hankow and thence to Shanghai. The party, as appears from the interview with Mr. Wrightson, was treated with the greatest courtesy by the Japanese officials and they did not confine their enquiries to these but also interviewed many native merchants. Mr. Wrightson declared:—

After a most comprehensive inquiry it is most difficult, if not impossible, to offer any satisfactory evidence to substantiate the theory that the Japanese Government, through the instrumentality of either its military or civil authorities, is at present purposely interfering with or placing any obstacles in the path of other nations for the industrial exploitation of this important part of the Chinese Empire. The absence of demand from this large, fertile, and thickly-populated province, which is not only being felt in the cotton piece-goods trade but in other commodities, is directly and principally attributable to the disorganised condition, both financial and commercial, of this district, a vast area of which, it must be remembered, was practically laid waste by both armies in their recent struggle. * * * * The recovery must necessarily be gradual, and while it is true trains are now running between the points named, it is not reasonable to suppose that these were available until quite recently for trade purposes. Patience must therefore be the watchword of those materially interested in this question, and it is my confident belief that a revival of trade on a much larger scale than has hitherto been witnessed will be the final result. * * * * The Japanese would be more than human if they did not make use of their advantages from being in military possession, and they still have 40,000 troops in Lower Manchuria. It remains to be seen whether they will be able to withdraw from their occupation in the eighteen months allowed by the Treaty of Peace, and that partly depends on Russia. While the Russians are in occupation of Northern Manchuria the Japanese will certainly not withdraw completely from the South. Partly as a result of this the financial system in Manchuria is very unsatisfactory and leaves much to be desired. The circulation of war notes by the Japanese Government to the extent of about yen 200,000,000 while increasing the wealth of the province will naturally tend to divert trade to their own country, more especially while this issue continues at any discount from local currency. The Chinese Government are tardy in introducing their goods throughout Manchuria, and the Japanese will become more strongly entrenched the longer the province remains under their control. The Powers should therefore be urged, through the usual channels, to use their good offices in expediting the time when the Chinese will assume jurisdiction, and also in concluding arrangements whereby the important port of Dalny, through which the Japanese, in the absence of Chinese Custom Stations, are now bringing in their goods not only free of import duty but free of all likin charges to any point in the interior where transportation can be effected by rail, will be placed on a basis similar to the port of Tsingtao, viz.:—open to the trade of all nations, and a Chinese Customs station established for the purpose of collecting the customary duties on the goods passing out of Dalny into Manchuria. The renewal or construction of the railway bridge over the Liao River, in the neighbourhood of Hsinmintun, which now seriously interferes with the large junk traffic over this waterway is a matter requiring immediate attention, and seems so reasonable that it cannot be doubted the Japanese Government will promptly instruct the Military Administration to remedy the difficulty beyond further complaint."

After all the people best able to judge of the future trade prospects of Manchuria are the merchants at Newchwang, and these, according to our contemporary, Mr. Wrightson and his party found to be practically unanimous in opinion that, in addition to the causes already named the trade of the port is seriously affected by the disorganisation of the usual railway transportation between Tieling and Kuchengtze, the latter a very important distributing centre, now in the hands of the Russians. About 40 miles of the line have been torn up, but is now being relaid. The Northern portion of the line is still in possession of the Russians who are said to be charging arbitrary rates with the purpose of forcing the trade of Kuchengtze through Vladivostok. Thus it is not only the Japanese who are taking advantage of the special circumstances of the time, and if Dalny needs careful watching with one eye, Vladivostok should occupy the Shanghai merchant's other eye.

A BIRTHDAY PARTY.

The second "birthday party" organized by Mrs. D. H. Blake and the ladies of the Union Church Auxiliary in aid of the Building Fund of the new church, proved a most delightful function. The weather, that most important feature, was perfect on Saturday, though this is the rainy month, and the garden of No. 261, Bluff—Mrs. Blake's residence—never looked prettier, with its wealth of bunting, dainty tea tables and flowers. Mrs. Blake received her guests in a most charming confection, and others assisting her were Mrs. Loomis, Mrs. Swain, Mrs. McBeth, Mrs. Bagnall, and Miss Nichols, while Mrs. Manley, Mrs. Neville, Mrs. Colton, and Mrs. Dearing presided over the tea-tables, assisted by the young ladies of the church, all in piquant summer costumes. During the intervals of the tea Miss Schereschewsky gave two attractive recitations, one grave, the other gay; a band discoursed music, and two little maidens, Miss Neville and Miss Hearne, repeated the delightful gavotte which we first saw when they played in the scenes from "Midsummer Night's Dream" about Christmas-time. In the latter part of the afternoon Mr. Brady delighted the large company in his own inimitable style.

The birth-day gifts made a very big pile before the afternoon drew to an end, and will undoubtedly make a distinct and welcome addition to the Building Fund.

We learn that as the financial result of the "Birthday Party" given by Mrs. D. H. Blake and the ladies of the Union Church Auxiliary on Saturday last, the substantial sum of 300 yen has been handed over to the Building Fund of the new church. The receipts were a trifle over this—yen 316.50, and as some of the bags have not yet been returned, and the fund is not yet closed, there may still be a little more to add to the amount.

THE LAW COURTS.

THE "BOYEKI" PROSECUTED.

The Yokohama Wire Manufacturing Co. has brought a prosecution against the Yokohama Boyeiki. The principal point of the charge is that the paper published a statement that the Company during the war sold various kinds of wire, to be used in military and naval operations, to the Russians through Messrs. Ginsburg and Co. The statement, according to the prosecution, defamed the Company.

ILL TREATING A CHILD.

In the criminal case of an old woman named Oshima Miyo, who was charged with having ill-treated an adopted child by reason of which the latter died, sentence was given on June 14th in the Tokyo District Court. The accused was punished with penal servitude for life.

CLAIM FOR INSURANCE PREMIUMS.

A case in which Mr. George R. Davis, President of the Manchester Assurance Co., Manchester, claims yen 17,026.35 from Mr. H. C. Litchfield, Administrator of the estate of the late Mr. N. P. Kingdon, of Messrs. Kingdon, Schwabe and Co., was brought up again on June 16th in the Yokohama District Court.

S. Nomura, of the Isoda Shokai, Tokyo, was examined as a witness. He deposed that since 1899 the firm had acted as the agents in Tokyo for the Manchester Assurance Co. The premiums collected in 1902 and 1903 amounted to yen 1,767.79, the sum being duly transferred to Messrs. Kingdon, Schwabe and Co., who were then agents for the Manchester Assurance Co., the Commercial Union Assurance Co., and the Phoenix Assurance Co. The foregoing premiums the witness' firm collected on account of the Manchester Assurance Co. Witness was under the impression the amount would have included the accounts of the two other insurance companies, but owing to the defacement of the business books concerned he had no accurate knowledge as to the accounts. He concluded that the sum also included the commission due to the Isoda Shokai. Examined by the plaintiff's Counsel, witness said that the remittance to Messrs. Kingdon, Schwabe & Co., by the Isoda Shokai was made by cheque and not in cash.

Mr. C. E. Miller, who it was decided at the previous hearing should be present as an expert witness as to the examination of the business books did not appear owing to absence from Yokohama. The plaintiff's Counsel asked the Court for permission to summon some other public accountant for the same purpose. The Court decided to do so on July 6th.

GOVERNMENT OFFICIAL PUNISHED.

S. Ito, formerly an official of the Kanagawa Kenchō, has been sentenced in the Yokohama District Court to one month's imprisonment with hard labour and a fine of four yen. The charge was that he had received a bribe while engaged in the local government office, from some fishermen at Oiso who applied for a fishing permit.

ALLEGED INCENDIARISM.

The trial of Mr. Frederick J. Curtis, an employee of Messrs. Carl Rhode and Co., who is charged with having attempted to set fire to his dwelling, was resumed on June 19th in the Yokohama District Court.

Mr. A. Fachtmann, of Messrs Carl Rhode and Co., was examined as a witness. He said that the accused's monthly income was one hundred yen, thirty yen special allowance and  $2\frac{1}{2}$  per cent. commission on transactions which he carried through. Examined by the accused's Counsel, witness further said that the dwelling of the accused belonged to Messrs Carl Rhode and Co., the rent being about twenty yen. The firm, however, did not collect rent from the accused. Repairs, if necessary, would have been made by the house-owners. After the fire, which occurred on April 12th, the accused personally asked the firm to make the repairs.

After the conclusion of the examination of this witness, the Judges proceeded to the dwelling of accused and examined the bath-room where the outbreak took place.

CLAIM AGAINST A LANDING AGENT.

A case in which K. Kawai, a hard-ware merchant of Osaka, claims yen 1,276.50 from Capt. A. Weston, a landing agent, came up again on June 19th in the Yokohama District Court.

Mr. H. D. Bell, of Messrs. Butterfield and Swire, was examined as a witness. He stated that Captain Weston was an independent landing agent and was patronized by Messrs. Butterfield and Swire up to Sept. 14th last. During his service with the firm, a special arrangement was maintained between the parties. Examined by the plaintiff's Counsel, the witness said that the appointment of Capt. Weston by Messrs. Butterfield and Swire, as the latter's landing agent was always published in the advertising columns of the local papers. He produced in Court a copy of one of the journals. He continued that in the case of damage to cargo while in the care of the landing agent, the responsibility would have been borne by the agents. As a practical usage in the shipping business, Messrs. Butterfield and Swire paid claims for such damage. The payment was afterward made good by the landing agent. Being shown a document Exhibit B-5 by the defendant's Counsel, the witness said that the latter was a copy of the contract between Messrs. Butterfield and Swire and Captain Weston which was in force at the time when the latter was acting as landing agent for the former.

Counsel discussed the position of landing agents, and the clauses of the bill of lading concerned in the dispute. The plaintiff's Counsel asked the Court for leave to summon three expert witnesses as to shipping business. The Judge rejected the request after which the hearing was adjourned till June 23rd.

ACTION BY A NOBLE FAMILY.

In the Tokyo District Court, Count Kuroda has instituted an action against Taki Maruyama, step-mother, asking her to return to his care his younger sister Take. According to the statement of the plaintiff, the defendant married Count Kuroda Kiyotaka, late father of the plaintiff, and gave birth to a daughter, Take, seven years ago. For a certain reason, after the death of the late Count, defendant left the family (riseki) and has since been living in the village of Takaoka, Katori district, Chiba prefecture. When she left the family, the plaintiff gave her two hundred shares—about twenty thousand yen according to the present market price—in the Nippon Yusen Kaisha as a pension, and at the same time she took her daughter with her. The plaintiff who is the legal guardian of his sister asked the defendant to send her back to the Kuroda family so she might attend school, but defendant refused to allow the child to leave her custody.

The hearing will take place on June 25th in the first civil section of the Court.

In an action instituted by Count K. Kuroda against Taki Maruyama, formerly his step-mother demanding the return of his younger sister named Take, the defendant has presented her reply in the Tokyo District Court through Mr. J. Saito, a lawyer.

The defendant says that she is willing to return to the plaintiff his sister and that the costs should be borne by plaintiff. Defendant adds that after an amicable consultation with the relatives of the Kuroda family, she left the house after her husband the late Count Kiyotaka Kuroda. When she left the family she took her daughter because of the latter being an infant at the time. She did not, however, intend to keep the daughter in custody for ever. The daughter has attended the Azabu Kindergarten School since January last. Defendant concluded by saying that she greatly regretted the present action against her. Probably, she added, the case had been created on groundless matters through some misunderstanding of the relatives of the family. The defendant had of course no objection to the request of the plaintiff.

CLAIM FOR SILK GOODS.

A case in which G. Iwaiba, a silk goods dealer, Sakai-cho, claims yen 15.98 from Mr. George R. Allen, No. 77, Yamashita-cho, came up on June 20th in the Yokohama Local Court.

Plaintiff was represented by Mr. Kuwate and the defendant was not present.

Plaintiff's Counsel stated that Mr. Allen bought several varieties of silk goods at plaintiff's shop on Sept. 5th, and on March 23rd and 24th this year.

Their value amounted to the sum claimed. Defendant did not pay for the goods purchased although the plaintiff frequently applied to him for payment.

Judgment was given at once in favour of plaintiff.

BASEBALL.

What with sailing races, an inter-town tennis tournament, a "Birth-day Party" and several private tennis parties on the Bluff, it was scarcely to be wondered at that the opening baseball match on Saturday afternoon drew but a fair attendance to the Y.C. and A.C., ground. The weather was gloriously fine, the sun's rays being agreeably tempered by a most refreshing breeze nearly the whole afternoon long. The teams engaged were:

McCHESNEY'S TEAM.

Walker
Correa
Dr. Jones
McChesney
Merriman
Brown
Hodges
Bell
S. Gray

THORN'S TEAM.

Thorn
Bird
Atkinson
Miller
Thompson
Blake
Dwyer
Worden
Hayes

The play was of a higher order than was expected for so early in the season, several of the men showing decided promise. At first it looked as if McChesney's side would romp round the others just as they pleased, for though starting with nothing in the first innings, they nailed down six runs in the second, and two more each in the third and fourth innings, while Thorn's merry men could not improve upon their opening essay, 2. But with the beginning of the fifth a change came over the play. Thorn's nine held their opponents well down, preventing them from scoring time and again, while gradually piling up the runs themselves. At the close of the seventh inning the scores stood: McChesney, 10; Thorn, 6, and it looked an even chance that the laggards would pull even. But McChesney struck luck in the eighth, Dr. Jones making a home run and sending Merriman home across the plate at the same time. This put the side six runs ahead, and as the age of miracles in local baseball seems past Thorn found it impossible to do more than cut this long lead in half, thus leaving him three runs behind. McChesney's team did not bat in the ninth inning. Score by innings:—

	1	2	3	4	5	6	7	8	9
McChesney .....	0	6	2	2	0	0	0	2	— 12
Thorn .....	2	0	0	0	1	2	1	0	3 9

Mr. P. E. Jenks umpired and Mr. Darell was scorer.

YOKOHAMA CITY ADMINISTRATION.

In connexion with certain complaints brought against the Yokohama City administration by foreign residents, the City authorities have issued the following explanation.

1.—WATER SUPPLY IN THE FORMER SETTLEMENT:—Only one main pipe was laid so that inconvenience has been experienced in the supply from time to time. The authorities intend to lay a second main pipe with a view to averting this trouble.

2.—CLEANSING THE DRAINS:—Owing to damage to machinery, the cleansing work of the drains has been temporarily stopped. New machines will shortly be imported from England. After their arrival the cleansing will be carried out on a large scale.

3.—ROAD REPAIRS:—Repairs to public roads were stopped during the war. The work, however, will be resumed this year.

YACHTING.

Races for 26 and 21 raters and for the Lark class took place on Saturday afternoon. There was a fine south-easterly breeze and altogether good yachting weather.

Surprise and Valkyrien were the only starters in the first named class and the latter got first out of the harbour entrance. On the reach to the Kawasaki Buoy the boats were very close together but later Valkyrien took the lead and maintained it to the end. Times:—

	Start.	Finish.	Corrected.
	h.m.s.	h.m.s.	h.m.s.
Valkyrien .....	2.15.45	5.06.26	5.01.46
Surprise .....	2.15.26	5.23.49	5.08.49

The 21 raters races resolved itself into a match between Winsome and Aimee. Aimee had the worst of the start but soon drew ahead and was first round the Tachibana buoy, the Mandarin Bluff mark, the quarantine ship and the Tachibana mark on the second round. But here Winsome, which had been chasing her closely, got the lead and, keeping it over the rest of the course, finished not many seconds ahead of her rival. Times:

	Start.	Finish.	Corrected.
	h.m.s.	h.m.s.	h.m.s.
Pele .....	2.15.04	4.43.51	4.36.51
Winsome .....	2.15.09	4.38.02	4.31.02
Edna .....	2.15.06	4.47.19	4.40.19
Sunbeam .....	2.15.08	4.57.19	4.48.19
Aimee .....	2.15.12	4.38.57	4.38.57

Four Larks started, No. 13 finishing first, No. 11 second, No. 4 third, No. 14 last.

INTER-TOWN TENNIS.

The first of what we hope will be a series of inter-town mixed tennis doubles were played off in the beautiful grounds of the Bluff Gardens on Saturday afternoon under the auspices of the L. L. T. and C. C. The delightful weather and the keen interest taken in the contest attracted a large attendance. Play began punctually and the result of a very evenly contested match was a win for the Tokyo players by two out of three. It should be explained that owing to the sudden indisposition of Mr. Chapman, Dr. Post took his place among the Yokohama representatives at the last moment. Scores:—

Miss Tripp and Mr. Murray Mollison (Yokohama) beat Miss Denning and Mr. Asabuki (Tokyo)—6-4, 8-6, 3-6, 6-4.

Miss R. Squire and Mr. Yamasaki (Tokyo) beat Mrs. Bate and Dr. Post (Yokohama)—7-5, 6-3, 1-6, 6-3.

Miss Squire and Mr. Rice (Tokyo) beat Miss Burdett Leach and Mr. Smith (Yokohama)—7-5, 4-6, 3-6, 6-4, 9-7.

The final of the Mixed Doubles Handicap was won on Thursday afternoon by Mrs. Bate and Mr. Johnston McClure by two sets to love. The games were 6-4, 6-4. Mrs. Bate and Mr. McClure were owing Miss Talbot and Mr. Stanley Moss  $\frac{1}{2}$  of 15.

SHIPPING ACCIDENTS.

On June 16th, the Osaka Shosen Kaisha's steamer Asahi Maru went ashore in the neighbourhood of Mokpho, Korea, owing to dense fog. She sustained damage to her bow. Having moved a portion of the cargo from the fore hold to the stern she avoided sinking and reached port.

The transport Toyotomi Maru (1,463 gross tons) which left Ujina on June 8th for Korean waters came in contact with a mine at 1 a.m. on June 15th off Myonchong, Hamgyong, and sank at once. She carried a staff officer, seven petty officers, a non-commissioned officer, five men, and general cargo. The same afternoon, the Keiho Maru was passing the scene and saved the master of the ship, an engineer and seven (or ten) of the crew. All the others are missing.

The Jiji remarks that there is another steamer called the Toyotomi Maru. This ship, however, is not employed by the Government as a transport.

The yacht Kathleen capsized in Yokohama harbour at 5.30 p.m. on Sunday, owing to the loss of her lead keel the bolts of which, being of iron, had become rusted and thus allowed the whole mass to drop off. She was cruising at the time in the neighbourhood of the pier. Mr. J. Eyton, his servant and a sendo, who were on the boat, were rescued by a sampan which was fortunately passing the scene.

Wrestling, fencing, etc., will be exhibited. All the streets were decorated with British and Japanese colours.

AMERICAN TOPICS.

According to A. C. Shaw, general agent of the passenger department of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, the movement of settlers from the American west to the Canadian west this year is at least 25 per cent. greater than for the corresponding period last year. Mr. Shaw added that the United States for the first four months of this year had contributed about 27,000 settlers to Canada.

According to the Winnipeg correspondent of Commercial West, the number of elevators located at interior points in the Canadian west has more than doubled in the past six years. From a total of 519 elevators with a maximum capacity of 15,379,000 bushels in 1900, there has been an increase up to last year to 1,018 elevators capable of accommodating 28,761,000 bushels of grain. The investment represented in these elevators is little less than $55,000,000.

More than 150,000 aliens arrived at ports of the United States in April, the largest number for any single month in the history of the immigration service. In April, 1905, immigrants to the number of 137,000 were admitted, and in the corresponding month of the preceding year 91,000. Immigration from Russia continued to increase, 30,000 persons from that country having been admitted in April last, as compared with 19,000 in the corresponding month of 1905. For the six month period ended April 30 last there were 526,955 arrivals.

The Pittsburgh Post estimates that over $1,000,000 worth of window glass was recently destroyed in San Francisco alone, and allowing for the damage at other cities the total is much larger. The American Window Glass Company, it is expected, will operate its machine plants all summer to relieve the situation. The Belgian manufacturers, who always enter the American market when prices get above a certain figure, are said to be casting about for a change to send forward a large amount of imported glass. This feature may keep down prices.

Trade of the United States with South American countries other than Argentina and Brazil is not large. The total imports from all South America in 1905 were $150,000,000 in value, and of this $115,000,000 was from Brazil and Argentina, leaving from all the remaining South American countries but $35,000,000. The exports to all South America in the same year were valued at $57,000,000, of which $34,000,000 was to Argentina and Brazil, leaving a balance of but $23,000,000 to all other countries of South America. Thus the total trade of the United States with South America in 1905 was $207,000,000.

The Directors of the Standard Oil Company have declared a quarterly dividend of 9 per cent. for the quarter ending June 30 on the $98,338,000 out-standing stock, compared with 9 per cent. for the corresponding period of last year and 15 per cent. for the March quarter. The quarterly payment calls for $8,850,000. Dividends have been paid by the company as follows: 1906, 24 per cent.; 1905, 40 per cent.; 1904, 36 per cent.; 1903, 44 per cent.; 1902, 45 per cent.; 1901, 48 per cent.; 1900, 48 per cent.; 1899, 33 per cent.; 1898, 30 per cent.; 1897, 32 per cent.; 1896, 31 per cent.; 1891 to 1895, 12 per cent.

The United States Steel Corporation, the Lackawanna Steel Co., the Jones & Laughlin Steel Co., Pennsylvania Steel Co., the Colorado Fuel & Iron Co., the Maryland Steel Co. and the Tennessee Coal & Iron Co., since the books were opened in May, have booked an aggregate of 1,000,000 tons of steel rails for delivery in 1907, the largest tonnage in history for this time of the year. Taking into consideration the orders for this year's delivery, it is safe to say that the total tonnage booked by the various companies is in excess of 700,000 tons above the actual production of the United States in 1905.

Archbishop Ireland has been interviewed at Milan by the Osservatore Cattolico, the foremost Catholic journal of Italy. He spoke enthusiastically of Catholicism in America. He said that President Roosevelt recognizes the strength of Catholicism as the chief factor in the unity of the great American family. The archbishop gave encouraging reports of the situation in the Philippines. He affirmed that the Vatican was disposed to meet American views by elevating natives to the episcopate and removing the Spanish element in the clergy, and of otherwise improving existing conditions.

"For many years," says Forest and Stream, "the angler has grumbled over the destruction of game fish caused by the pollution of our streams. By a portion of the public this is considered the selfish complaining of sportsmen whose recreations are thereby limited. The public is not aware that, with the game fish, our commercial fisheries are being destroyed; that many millions of dollars are thus lost commercially, and that the public is being deprived of thousands of tons of toothsome and nourishing food, so that the whole cost of living is measurably increased by this treatment of the streams. Time was when the streams of New England and many of those of New York abounded with salmon. Time was when the sturgeon fishery and sturgeon oil of the Hudson river were important and valuable commercially, when Albany 'beef' was in demand, and when sturgeon eggs formed an important article of export to Russia. In the boyhood of men yet young, the shad fisheries in the Connecticut and Housatonic and the Hudson were worth millions of dollars, and during the months of May and early June most delicious shad were to be had for a trifling price. Salmon, sturgeon and shad in New England and New York have almost disappeared. Of recent years millions of shad fry have been distributed in the upper waters of the Hudson river, but the shad in that stream become less and less."

In his address to the Savings Bank Association, Mr. Vanderbilt quoted the United States government actuary as unqualifiedly predicting that Greater New York will, when the recent issue of 4 per cent bonds mature, have a population of 8,500,000. To this the Wall Street Journal adds: "The United States actuary could safely make that prediction. During the past twenty-five years the population of New York has increased 110 per cent. The recent issue of bonds has fifty years to mature. If the population should increase in the next twenty-five years it would amount in 1930 to 8,450,000, or as much as the government actuary predicts it will be in fifty years. Even calculating the population on a more conservative basis, it would appear that the government actuary is vastly underrating the future expansion of Greater New York. The chairman of the London county council recently predicted that the population of Greater London in 1930 would amount to 11,000,000, which would be a growth of 67 per cent., the population would amount at the time of maturity of the 4 per cent. bonds to 11,000,000, or 2,500,000 more than the government actuary's estimates. New York is actually growing faster than London, so that it may safely be predicted that by the time the 4 per cent. bonds mature the population of this imperial city will equal or exceed that of London at that time, notwithstanding that Greater London has now 2,500,000 more people than Greater New York."

The report of the Commissioner of Fisheries shows that the catch in 1905 was worth $56,250,000, this being exclusive of the very considerable fisheries of insular possessions and the immense quantities of fish taken for home consumption and by sportsmen. The number of persons employed in this industry is about 232,000, and the capital invested exceeds $82,000,000. The most valuable of all the fishery products is the oyster, in the output of which the United States surpasses all other countries combined. The crop of 1905 may be placed at 32,000,000 bushels, with a market value of $15,760,000. Virginia has recently assumed the first rank as an oyster-producing state, the state's yield being now upward of 8,500,000 bushels, with a value to the producers of $3,250,000.

The great high-sea fisheries for cod, haddock, hake, halibut, mackerel, herring and other well-known food fishes have been fairly successful as a whole, and have yielded about $7,500,000. The take of mackerel was less than in any of the four preceding years, the sudden decrease in the abundance of this fish beginning in 1886 and continuing to the present time. The lobster fishery continues to show a diminishing yield, with a disproportionate increase in value. In 1905 the catch was less than in the previous year, and on the Massachusetts coast was particularly light. The decrease in the abundance of the lobster began about fifteen years ago. At present a large part of the lobsters consumed in the United States comes from Nova Scotia. The whale fishery, which at one time was carried on by an immense fleet of fine sailing vessels and was the leading fishing industry of the country, is now conducted chiefly with steamers in the north Pacific and Arctic oceans, and is an expensive, uncertain and often unremunerative business. The value of the baleen, blubber oil and sperin oil taken has been less than $900,000. The anadromous fishes of the Atlantic and Pacific seaboard—the salmon, the shad, the alewives, the striped bass and the perches—have come to the streams in abundance, and represent $15,000,000 of income to the fishermen. The fisheries of the Great Lakes have yielded over $2,700,000, and in general are in a satisfactory condition.

L'ALLIANCE FRANCAISE.

The Alliance Francaise brought another successful season to a close on Tuesday evening, when Van Schaick Hall was crowded with a deeply interested audience. The great attraction was the collection of photographs taken by Lieut. Colonel Baron Corvisart, Military Attaché to the French Legation in Tokyo, during the late Russo-Japan War. These were thrown upon the screen by the aid of a stereopticon and proved delightfully clear and distinct in every particular. Baron Corvisart took his audience from Korea across the Yalu to Motienling, then through the valley of the Liao to Liaoyang, thence back to Port Arthur, finishing up with some capital pictures of Mukden and its neighbourhood. At the close of the exhibition M. de Cuers de Cogolin moved a hearty vote of thanks to Baron Corvisart, which was freely rendered, and then took advantage of the opportunity to thank the gentlemen who had contributed papers during the season and the ladies and gentlemen who had made the musical part of the programmes such a delightful and artistic success. We might mention that among the audience were M. Hamard, the French Minister, la Baronne and Mademoiselle Corvisart and nearly every member of the French Community of Yokohama.

"DICK SEDDON."

A New Zealander contributes the following personal recollections of the late Richard Seddon to the N.-C. Daily News:

My recollections of Mr. Richard John Seddon, P.C., LL.D., Premier of New Zealand, better known to Maorilanders as "King Dick" only date back to a time when he had "achieved greatness" for it cannot be denied that he was a great man—but I had many opportunities of seeing and knowing the man intimately and learned to appreciate the sterling worth of his somewhat rugged character. A hard worker himself he demanded a full tale of bricks from those who served under him, and to the faithful servant and loyal friend Dick Seddon's gratitude and staunchness were past all expression. A Lancashire man by birth he never lost that peculiar broadness of speech peculiar to Lancashire—and the greater his intenseness the more noticeable became his dialect. A massive man with powerful head and bull-like neck—a sonorous voice and far-reaching. About a fortnight before leaving New Zealand for the East I met Mr. Seddon at a social gathering and informing him of my early departure he specially desired I should call and wish him goodbye. Before, however, I could do this, he had left for Westport on some political matter, and I concluded I should not hear from him again. As my steamer left the wharf a telegram was handed me containing the words, "Safe journey and good luck." This was very typical of the man—he was great in little things as well as large ones. Some five years ago, when his wife was very ill, I was conversing with him and he told me of his early days and struggles, amongst them his striving after knowledge. If ever a woman made a man, Mrs. Seddon made her husband. An illiterate man, his wife in their early New Zealand days (shortly after his arrival from Victoria) insisted on Dick attending a night school. Seddon, although not averse to this, frequently played the truant, spending the interval with some boon companions.

By some means Mrs. Seddon got wind of this and next evening arrived on the scene and metaphorically led Dick away by the ear to school—and ever after took him to school like any child, and waited to bring him home. Mr. Seddon himself has often told me the story, which Mrs. Seddon laughingly confirmed. Mr. Seddon was a great man, he was a strong man, and better than all he was a good man, and New Zealand and the Empire are the losers by his death. Dick Seddon's name will be handed down to posterity with honour while New Zealand remains.

INDUSTRIAL HOME OF NORTH JAPAN COLLEGE SENDAI, JAPAN.

REPORT OF WORK FROM APRIL 1ST, 1905, TO APRIL 1ST, 1906.

The Industrial Home of North Japan College has had another year of unusual interest and prosperity. In this Home, young men with limited means manage to earn their way through the General Course and Higher Department of North Japan College.

In some respects, no branch of the work done by the Japan Mission of the Reformed Church can show better and more encouraging results. The work of the young men in the Home is so systematized that by diligent application these students often manage to excel other men in the school with more liberal means for it must be borne in mind that all who are permitted in the Home come from the poorer class and are students who, otherwise, could not secure for themselves a good college education.

During the past year the four departments—Farm, Dairy, Printing, and Store—all have shown a marked increase in their departmental interest and business. Difficulties of all kinds,—even the famine had its bad effects upon certain parts of the Home,—criticisms, and competition, all were strongly felt, met with, many prejudices overcome, and new friends and patrons created.

The Farm under the good care of our farmer, Mr. Sato, has made excellent progress, and all the vegetables, grapevines and strawberry plants were improved, so that the crops of this department rank among the very best in the Sendai market.

The Dairy has had a year of unusual prosperity. Every month showed an increase in business. The Government hospitals gave us large orders for milk and complimented us on its good quality. The 18 cows and 16 heifers in our herd escaped disease and at all times met the requirements of our constantly increasing trade.

Hitherto the Printing Department has always been looked upon as one of the best branches of our work. This standard has been maintained, and our head printer Mr. Mizuno, has more than doubled the business during the past year. Large contracts were made and very successfully completed. New magazines, and annuals, and annual papers have been printed, so that during the past year, by careful record-keeping, our books show that 626,450 pages of the above kind of printing were done, exclusive of the thousands of small jobs, such as name-cards, letter-heads, and bill-heads, envelopes, programmes, paper-bags, etc. The Kaneko Memorial Press, as we are known, has the reputation of doing the best work in English, north of Tokyo. The book-making department has grown, and the making of paper pads for note and letter work has proved a good step. A new branch was added—the making of note-books, and during the coming year this promises to become a very extensive and remunerative part of the printing department. Our great and chief need is a new cylinder printing press, and we earnestly hope that some one may help us meet this great need in our work in this branch of the Industrial Home.

In the Book Store we have experienced much hard work to keep us running and meet the keen competition. This branch of the work has shown the largest amount of business done, but not the largest amount of profit. This is due to the constant stocking of the store. Mr. Mayama, who has charge of this part of the Home, has been very faithful and did difficult work, but trade has increased, mistakes of the previous years have been partly corrected, and conditions look quite hopeful. We truly believe that by next year we shall be able to say better things of this strong and useful arm of the Industrial Home. The store has a real service to perform. We are the sole agents for northern Japan, of Bibles, hymnals, and other books and minor articles. The store aims to furnish students with text-books, note-books, paper, pens, pencils and ink at a little cheaper prices than the same grade of goods can be bought at other stores. The store also aims to deal with publishers of books, and in this way can furnish books to the College at almost cost price, saving to the school and its professors the middleman's profit.

The work done by the students is delivering milk, morning and evening, carrying newspapers, helping on the farm, working in the Printing Department, delivering goods from the store salesmen and a few office assistants in some of the leading places of business in Sendai. None of the work is difficult, but all of it proves good exercise and pastime for the students of the Home.

During the past year, on account of limited means, the Home has sheltered and fed 57 young men. At the present time there are only 48 students in the home on account of limited means, and the condition of the rooms. The limit has been set 55 until better accommodations can be provided for the young men. At present 28 of the students in the Home are active Christians, 5 having begun this new life during current year. Although we can report only this number as Christians, we wish to add that nearly all in the Home attend the religious meetings and prayer services held there; although not professing Christ, many lead lives fit to be called Christian. Strength of character and personal purity are insisted upon in all the departments of the Home.

The finances of the Home for the fiscal year show an increase of yen 3,645.60 over that of the previous year.

Total expenditures of all Departments of	Yen.
Home for Year ending April 1st, 1906.	17,285.78
Total earnings or income from all Departments (including an appropriation of yen 1,200.00 from North Japan College through the Mission)	15,716.94

Although the deficit is large, it is largely due to stock on hand in the store which proved by actual inventory on April 1st, 1906 to be yen 3,014.25. And the combined interests of the home including all the property are valued, at a low estimate, at yen 15,000.00.

We firmly believe that with the present stock on hand and with the increased trade, that this deficit will be overcome during the coming year.

The organization of the Home has been improved, the old Constitution has been revised, and the Home, apart from its control by the Board of Directors of North Japan College has seen fit to establish a "Board of Managers," consisting of four persons, a superintendent, who is to be chairman, a monitor, who is to act as Secretary, and a Treasurer and a member of the Board of Directors of the College. One of these four shall be a member of the Mission, and the Board of Managers shall be appointed by the Board of Directors of North Japan College and shall hold office until removed, or until their resignations are accepted by the Board of Directors, which in cases reserves to itself the veto power.

This Board of Managers with Mr. Shiro Tanaka, Superintendent of the Home, and Dean of the Middle School Department, at its head, has already proved quite useful. All questions are fully discussed, and monthly meetings are held by this Board of Managers. In this way the different departments of the Home are being very carefully looked into, and all Home interests are carefully guarded as well as greatly stimulated.

May we in conclusion thank all who have shown interest in this branch of the work and again ask you not to forget us, but give us of your means, your sympathy and your prayers.

Respectfully submitted, J. MONROE STICK,

Manager and Treasurer.

CORRESPONDENCE.

CRUELTY TO ANIMALS.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "JAPAN MAIL."

SIR,—I would draw the attention of the newly formed Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals to a sad spectacle in Honmura-road. For some weeks past a poor dog, terribly affected with mange, has been dragging out a pitiful existence along this road. This morning I noticed that the miserable wretch had entered upon the last stage of his malady, the hind-quarters being partially paralyzed. No one seems to own the unhappy beast, and as it is a public danger, spreading infection wherever it goes, it should be dealt with officially. Surely this is a case to which the Secretary of a duly organized Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals could draw the attention of the police, so that the poor sufferer could be speedily relieved of the loathsome burden of his diseased and hopeless life.

Yours truly,

Yokohama, June 16th.

DOG-LOVER.

JAPANESE SERVANTS.

(TO THE EDITOR OF THE "JAPAN MAIL.")

SIR,—Doubtless many of your readers, like myself will have noticed, with drooping hopes, the cessation of that most important and interesting discussion recently opened in your columns by "Householder."

Surely no such pressing and urgent need for the well-being of the Foreign Resident in Japan, has ever been voiced in the public journals, and the experiences described by your correspondent are strangely identical with those of most westerners.

Enough is already known of the system of robbery, conspiracy and lying that is practised upon the foreigner by his Japanese domestics, but surely there is yet sufficient pride and enterprise amongst us to battle, by united action, the influence of a society that spies and sits in judgement upon the actions of every western householder in the port.

Two days ago I dismissed my cook for very ample reasons, but in consideration of his wife's illness, I added materially to the amount of wages due, and also at his request gave him a written testimonial in praise of his excellent cooking abilities; this safely in possession, his conduct became of the most insulting possible description. And in demanding to know what cook I had engaged in his place, he remarked that no foreigner need attempt to deceive a Japanese servant for there was a society through which everything could be found out that was desired, also that he would know all about the new servants in a very short time. The following morning it was discovered that he had broken all the crockery he could lay hands on before leaving the house, and also that several newly bought provisions were missing.

Other equally tangible causes that have only since come to my knowledge lead me to publicly express the hope that nobody will engage this person, purely on the strength of my recommendation referred to, out of no vindictive spirit, but from a sense of justice to my fellow foreigners.

Amongst the views on this subject of servants that have been called forth in your esteemed journal, one finds much in evidence that dissident voice that is ever forthcoming when sufficient sincerity and courage is displayed to attack that ridiculous adulation of the Japanese, which is as great an injustice to the race in question, as to those who are deceived by it; and some of your correspondents even aver that the troubles of householders are due to their treatment of their servants. I can only say that in no house have domestics met with greater kindness, leniency and practical charity than in my own, and also that in no house has there been greater swindling, deceit, disobedience, aversion to cleanliness, insolence and contempt for the European.

To humble the Japanese servant to a realization of his place and relation to his foreign master, is an achievement well worthy of the combined efforts of all concerned.

Yours faithfully,

RANDALL HARGREAVES.

No. 803 Kitagata, Yokohama.

June 17th, 1906.

(TO THE EDITOR OF THE "JAPAN MAIL.")

SIR,—I have read with much interest the letters appearing in your paper on the subject of Japanese servants and the different views they all express, and think on the whole that the opinion of Mr. Fred Pollard, the one nearest the true estimate of the case.

I have lived in Japan for 20 years and have never experienced the calamities at servants' hands that have befallen Mr. Hargreaves. During my residence here I have lived with my family, in boarding houses, in hotels, in rooms messing outside, in inns, and alone in my own house as I am doing now, and never once with all the diversity of servants I have employed, have I met one of the character described by Mr. Hargreaves as applying to the class as a whole. For the last three years I have left the running of my house entirely to the servants, and without any exaggeration, have lived as economically as it is possible to live in these times of high prices. My monthly bills are ridiculously small taken in comparison with the rates charged at boarding houses and hotels, and this all proves to my mind that Japanese servants are not such a bad lot after all. It is very probable that there are bad characters amongst them. What country in the world can boast none? There are also good characters, and in my opinion, these predominate in Japan and it is a very simple matter to procure them when looking for servants. The secret of getting the best out of one's employees is to treat them like human beings, not like slaves or dogs, and in turn they will respect their employers and do their best to win approbation. A word of appreciation given at the right time will do wonders with them.

The cook whom Mr. Hargreaves has just dismissed, certainly behaved in a very unwarrantable manner, according to Mr. Hargreaves, but what would we think if we heard his side of the story? Is Mr. Hargreaves positive that there is nothing he has done to exasperate the man. It is doubtful whether any other resident of Japan has had a similar experience.

As to their being thieves as a class, that I do not believe, for to quote my own experiences again, I have never had an article stolen from the house and there are many things around in the rooms which an unscrupulous person could take and which I should probably not miss at the time. What valuables I have I leave lying on my dressing table; very often money is left there. My prizes and other articles of intrinsic value are on the shelves in the various rooms and I often leave the house entirely in the servants' charge when away for a week or 10 days at a time in the interior on business. On my return everything is in its place and the house is as clean and bright as a new pin.

I remain, Dear Sir, Yours faithfully,

BACHELOR.

(TO THE EDITOR OF THE "JAPAN MAIL.")

SIR,—In your issue of the 9th instant, your correspondent "Fred. Pollard" (to whom I would refer for brevity sake as "F. P."), makes a few remarks on my letter in your issue of the 8th, suggesting a combination of employers of domestic servants for remedying the defects in their behaviour which are well-known to employers.

Your correspondent states that he has generally had satisfaction with his servants during a period of 7 years. This gentleman is no doubt a bachelor, and his general satisfaction is not surprising. Servants generally want to leave a house where a mistress rules, to go to a bachelor's house, because the bachelors are not at home during the day, usually do not wish to be bothered with the details of house-keeping, and leave almost everything to the servant, who virtually takes the place of a mistress. "F. P." says the whole position is this:—"That provided householders treat their servants fair and square, they will never have cause for complaint." I presume the word "they" refers to the householders. This is a sweeping remark that few persons will agree with, and I will now give "F. P." a case in point. About ten months ago, when servants were scarce, my wife employed, as cook, a man who had only experience in a Japanese house. As short trial showed up his defects: he proved lazy, very dull in learning and could hardly make a fire properly, but at the same time quite honest. My wife, though not able to speak much Japanese, taught him cooking during the long period of ten months, and bore with his shortcomings only because she found him honest. Wishing to get his wife a maid's position, my cook about two weeks ago induced our maid to leave us without giving an hour's notice, and then coolly introduced his wife to take the vacant position, asking his mistress to teach her the work in the same way as she had taught him, as his wife had never before entered a foreigner's house. This my wife refused to do, as she had taught the previous maid all she knew, and yet she was not above running away for a softer job at Kanizawa. This refusal did not please the cook, and he consulted his friends belonging to the cook's guild, who soon found him a place with somebody going to the hills, and only requiring him for a short time, who was willing to arrange for employing him without a recommendation, on account of the great demand for temporary servants there is at this season. The cook then came to me and said he wanted to go to Korea, and would I allow him to leave in four days. I reminded him that he was employed on the distinct understanding that he should give two weeks' notice when he wanted to leave. He then hunted up and offered a dozen substitutes, none of whom had had a good three months' experience in a kitchen. This man was taught his work from the beginning, when he was employed at yen 10 per month, and in the course of ten months, his wages were increased to yen 14 per month. Does "F. P." think that this cook has meted out fair and square treatment to me? We pay our servants expenses in their sickness and my wife gives them personal attention!

Our former cook when he wanted to leave, was told we would not take any one who had no testimonial, and he brought us a substitute possessing good testimonials. We made arrangements with the substitute to come on next day, and paid the cook his wages. He cleared out, but the substitute never turned up! This substitute was at the time actually employed elsewhere, and had no intention of entering into my service, but only put in an appearance and made arrangements to come next day, in order to enable his friend to get his wages.

A few days ago, I was in a house in Yokohama the mistress and master of which are the most just and the kindest people I have ever met, yet the oldest in service of their three servants was only 16 days, the next seven days, and third six days. These people are very old residents of Yokohama.

"F. P." nor no one else need tell me that my experience is a singularly bad one, because I have met many other employers whose experience is as bad as mine and some worse, but the remedy is easy to apply. Butchers, fruit-sellers, washermen, all kinds of tradesmen, and even domestic servants have guilds, all working against the foreigner. What is his obvious duty?

When applying for work, another trick of servants who, on account of their behaviour have failed to get recommendations, is to get from their friends the name of some employer who has left the country, and when asked to produce a testimonial would say, "I worked with Mr. So and So who has gone away, and I did not ask for a testimonial." The person named has left the country, and of course cannot be communicated with, the applicant is probably corroborated in his statement by the servant introducing him, and he is employed. In other cases, the statement is that the testimonial is left at home, and the applicant is asked to go and get it, but never returns. In other cases he says he obtained a recommendation, but lost it.

In my next letter, I shall sketch out the lines on which I think a householders' union to put a stop to these and other tricks of servants may be worked, after which I think an endeavour will be made to establish a union.

I am, Sir, etc.,

Tokyo, 16th June, 1906.

P.S.—I have received several communications from gentlemen who are willing to co-operate with me in forming a union, and I shall be pleased to receive more through the Japan Mail in the first instance.

(TO THE EDITOR OF THE "JAPAN MAIL.")

SIR,—I consider the letters you have published regarding Japanese servants are in very bad taste. If we have 1,000 correspondents we have 1,000 different opinions. There is no reason why the question should be put to the public at large, the matter simply rests with the employer. I have been in this country for the past 22 years, and have found if a person is paid regularly, not kept under strict control and allowed to do pretty much as he or she liked then you may keep a servant for some time. There is no gratitude for past favours, but then you will find such qualities identical with this class in most countries. There is no possibility of forming a union, or servants' registry, simply because when it comes to a question of the foreigner versus the Japanese, on the servant question at any rate, the smartest Westerner is vanquished, or in plain words "boycotted" on various "slim" excuses. In England and the continent it is different. If a person can afford to keep a servant, then he or she simply goes to a registry office, and there chooses from amongst a hundred applicants. However, as suggested above, even though your columns were filled each day with letters from aggrieved employers of domestic servants, no satisfactory solution is possible in this country. My honest opinion is that things are far from unfavourable with regard to Japanese domestic servants. Now if some one had touched upon the peculiarities of the native workman—carpenter, plasterer, &c.—I consider it would have been more to the point. But at the same time we must not forget that paragraphs are printed in foreign newspapers about servants refusing cold meat, pickles, &c.—where possibly the honest workman can hardly provide bread and tea for his family. There is no question but that some servants are unduly pampered; but there are other cases again where the contrary may be said.

Yours truly,

DOMESTIC.

A NOTABLE SPEECH.

(TO THE EDITOR OF THE "JAPAN MAIL.")

SIR,—A most interesting address was delivered last Sunday afternoon by Mr. Sheldon, of the Ethical Society of America, who is now on a visit to Japan, in the Hall of the Higher Commercial School, Tokyo. Prof. Yamakawa, ex-President of the Tokyo Imperial University, was in the chair. Among those who attended were Baron Dr. Kikuchi, ex-Minister for Education, Prof. Mitora, Prof. Nakashima, Prof. Anezaki, Mr. Yokoi, and many other scholars.

Mr. Sheldon spoke at length on the unity of the human race, whilst he by no means ignored the significance of every nationality. On the contrary he laid stress on nationality, whose interests, however, should coincide in every respect with those of the whole human race. Both should fuse into one. He strongly deprecated the view that a certain race would in future become dominant over all other races, and powerfully denounced Nietzscheism. The audience seemed to be much moved by his remarks concerning a mother and her son whom he saw one morning worshipping at the Yasukuni shrine. He said he was not impressed with the material progress of Japan, but was greatly touched by the scene of the mother and her son. They were paying homage to the dead, who died not only for their country, but also for the United States of America, for Russia, nay, for the whole human race. He closed his significant lecture with an emphatic insistence on the so-called ethical trinity, i. e., Truth, Duty, and Service to the Human Race.

I am, etc.,

B. T.

THE STOKER.

BY WILLIAM HERVEY WOODS.

In the darkness under the world,
His roof is the coal-dust cloud o'erhead,
And dust is the floor beneath him spread,
And the mole in garden sod
Knows more of the sweet daylight than he Who swings his shovel in bunker three,
Or tugs at the furnace rod.

Down deeper than engine purrs and swings,
On the grimy under side of things,
He leaps when the bugles blow
And great guns thunder in sudden fight;
And then, pent there in the choking night,
Shifts the coal heap to and fro.
He hath visions of deeds 'twere good to do—

Of a man's part cleanly played clean through Aloft in the open sun—
But his to sweat by the furnace door.
And reel at last to the reeling floor
When his captain's fight is won.
The ooze was better drinking in the moat!
And finally when Chapter Last came by
I vow I thought that then and there I'd die—

Other dreams come to him yet more dear—
Of God's wide sky, and a sea glass-clear,
And a salt wind, cool, cool, cool!
To him of the pit a breath divine
That his shrivelled soul drinks in like wine
In a dream-draught rich and full.
Small is his need if the old flag win,
And if it lose—then a louder din,
A rent in the iron wall,
And Death swirls in through the jagged gate.

And the stoker finds in the hold his fate
And coffin and grave and all.

God keep thee, shipmate; and some good day
May he from heaven's bridge stoop and say,
"O man by the doors of hell,
Come up! For the stifling toil is past,
And the good ship rides in port at last;
All's over and all is well;
Come up to the deck of the world!"

TELEGRAMS.

(REUTER'S SPECIAL SERVICE.)

NATAL CHIEFS SURRENDER.

London, June 14.

The Zulu chief Sigana and his eldest son have surrendered.

GERMANY, TURKEY AND PERSIA.

In reply to a long question with reference to reported German overtures to Turkey and Persia for the purchase of a foothold on the German Gulf, and a German application for a concession to build a railway to Bagdad near the Persian frontier, Mr. Runciman on behalf of the Foreign Secretary, said there was no official information which he could give.

THE TRIPLE ALLIANCE.

It is reported from Vienna that Count Goluchowski, Minister for Foreign Affairs, replying in the Austrian Delegation to attacks upon the Triple Alliance said the Alliance was only operative in the event of any ally being attacked on two sides. He denied that Austria contemplated a campaign of expansion in the Balkans.

THE ENGLISH EDUCATION BILL.

It is expected that the House of Commons will finish with the Education Bill by July 2nd and will rise about Aug. 8th, the autumn session beginning in October.

TROUBLE IN EGYPT.

London, June 15.

Five British officers were out shooting at a village near Tanta, in Egypt when they were surrounded by villagers, deprived of their arms and bludgeoned. Capt. Bull, of the 6th Dragoons, died of his wounds; Capt. Pine and Capt. Coffin, of the Mounted Infantry, had their arms broken; Lieut. Smethwick, of the Dublin Fusiliers, was badly hurt.

SERIOUS STEAMER EXPLOSION.

An explosion occurred on board the steamer Haverford, which arrived at Liverpool from New York. Eleven were killed and 40 injured. The accident is attributed to fumes from a consignment of naphtha.

THE BALKANS.

Greco-Roumanian relations have been formally broken off. Russia will protect the Greeks in Roumania.

MASSACRE OF JEWS.

London, June 15.

A Jewish anarchist threw a bomb in the midst of the Corpus Christi procession at Bialystok (a town in Russia, 50 miles S.W. of Grodno), killing and wounding many. A massacre of the Jews ensued in which hundreds were killed and wounded. The Jews fled to the forests, pursued by the mob.

NATAL.

It is stated that twenty per cent. of the troops operating in Natal are on the sick-list.

THE TANTAH AFFAIR.

Later.

It is believed that the Tanta affair was due to the officers damaging the crops, and was not political in origin.

AMERICAN MEAT INSPECTION.

President Roosevelt entirely disapproves of the House of Representatives Committee's Meat Inspection Bill as being quite inadequate.

BRITISH NAVAL MANŒUVRES.

The Naval manœuvres are being carried on in the most active manner. Two liners were captured by the invaders, who early this morning attacked Plymouth and Portsmouth, their destroyers attempting to force an entrance into the port. The latter were, however, repulsed. Battles are now proceeding off Plymouth.

EDUCATION BILL.

Sir H. Campbell-Bannerman will move on Monday for a closure resolution, limiting the Committee's proceedings on the Education Bill to sixteen days, and dropping the second part of the Bill.

NATAL REBELLION QUASHED.

London, June 16.

It is officially announced that the Zulu chief Bambata was killed on the 10th June. The Natal Government considers that the rebellion has been suppressed as there are no indications of its spreading.

The militia and reserves will be recalled at the earliest possible moment but 3,000 men will be maintained at the front as a precautionary measure.

THE EDUCATION QUESTION IN ENGLAND.

Mr. Balfour has given notice of an amendment to the closure resolution, declaring that the House objects to an undue limitation of the measure.

BYE-ELECTIONS.

Canbury has been elected M. P. for the City of London (replacing Sir Edward Clarke, resigned); and the Rt. Hon. Alfred Lyttelton (late Secretary for the Colonies) has been returned unopposed for St. George's.

UNHAPPY RUSSIA.

The situation in Russia is of the gloomiest. The Sevastopol express train arrived at St. Petersburg six hours late owing to an armed attack made upon it by 2,000 peasants.

Later.

The Duma has discussed the Bialystok affair. It is asserted that the massacre of the Jews was arranged by the Government and the Duma has sent three members to investigate.

Meanwhile the riots were renewed yesterday. Thousands of peasants have arrived in the town and are engaged in looting. Six thousand Jews are camped in the forest surrounded by troops.

DREYFUS AGAIN.

The Court of Cassation has met to consider the Dreyfus case. The Court is examining the secret dossier behind closed doors.

POLITICS IN ENGLAND.

Later.

A band of female suffragists, with flags waving, and amid shouting, interrupted a meeting which Mr. Asquith was addressing in Northampton. They were ejected. Subsequently the socialist interrupters of the meeting were ejected.

FIGHTING AND SACKING CONTINUE.

London, June 17.

The fighting and sacking continue at Bialystok, where martial law has been proclaimed. The outbreak is disastrously affecting the bourses and there has been a heavy fall in Russian securities. Moscow is in a very unsettled state, and there are street demonstrations daily. The troops have been increased in the factory quarters of St. Petersburg.

MORE CHIEFS SURRENDER.

London, June 18.

More Zulu chiefs are surrendering and it is expected that the majority of the rebels will have come in by June 19. Only two important chiefs are still holding out.

THE BIELOSTOK MASSACRES.

London, June 18.

Leading Jewish members of the Duma have telegraphed to Mr. Lucien Wolf, the well-known Jewish journalist, in London, that the Bialystok affair is clearly the beginning of an organised massacre which only energetic intervention can prevent. The message adds: "Appeal to all influences to help us."

THE NORWEGIAN CROWNING.

The Prince and Princess of Wales have left London to represent King Edward at King Haakon's coronation.

THE TANTAH AFFAIR.

Later.

Thirty-five Egyptians have been arrested in connection with the Tanta affair.

BRITISH NAVAL MANŒUVRES.

The first period of the British naval manœuvres, the object whereof was to test the new mobilization arrangements, the reserve divisions and the effectiveness of the coast defences, terminated on Saturday. It is understood that the results are most satisfactory.

THE RUSSIAN TROUBLES.

Five soldiers and a policeman were wounded and two killed in Warsaw on Saturday. A police officer's wife and two soldiers were shot dead on Sunday. There have been no arrests.

BRITISH BATTLESHIPS COLLIDE.

London, June 19.

The British battleship Resolution collided with the battleship Ramillies during the manœuvres. The latter was towed to Chatham, one of her propellers having been damaged.

THE CLOSURE.

Mr. Balfour's amendment with regard to the closure was rejected by 341 votes to 151. Sir H. Campbell-Bannerman proposes that Parliament should adjourn over August and September and meet in the Autumn.

CHINESE ON THE RAND.

A section of the Liberal press persists in demanding the stoppage of Chinese coming into the Rand and the speedy deportation of those already there.

The Daily News declares that the reluctance of the Government's agents to execute its policy is making it a laughing-stock in South Africa.

DREYFUS VINDICATED.

London, June 19.

At a public sitting of the Court of Cassation the representative of the Public Prosecutors reviewed the Dreyfus case, maintaining that no treason had been committed by Dreyfus or anyone else. The whole affair was a mystification, the outcome of coincidences, hasty conclusions and the operations of the agents provocateurs' counter espionage. The Department demanded the cancellation of the conviction without retrial.

RUSSIAN TROUBLES.

Kronstadt reports an increase in the agitation among the sailors and workmen of the fortress and among the troops. A repetition of the October disturbances is feared. Reinforcements and guns have arrived.

THE JEWISH MASSACRES.

Later.

Three Duma delegates have gone to Bialystok. They state that the massacre was worse than that at Odessa.

The great Jewish financial houses are moving in the most active way to prevent a recurrence of the massacre.

Lord Rothschild has interviewed Sir Edward Grey, British Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs.

Replying to a question in the House of Commons, Sir Edward Grey said he was unable to make representations to Russia. It would be premature to ask the British Admiralty to alter the arrangements concerning the proposed visit of a British fleet to Kronstadt.

THE TINNED MEAT QUESTION.

From Washington it is reported that the House Committee on Agriculture has conceded President Roosevelt's demand to eliminate from the Meat Bill the clause providing for appeal to the Courts, but President Roosevelt has not insisted upon labelling the date and contents of the tins when packed.

THE EDUCATION QUESTION.

The House of Commons, after a prolonged discussion, has adopted the Government's closure resolution by a vote of 262 to 121.

RUSSIAN AFFAIRS.

London, June 20.

It is reported from St. Petersburg on trustworthy information that the troops and police quartered at Bielostok assisted instead of hindering the operations of those massacring the Jews there,—which were provoked by unknown persons in St. Petersburg. The strikes are extending. Four divisions of troops are concentrated at Peterhof. The Standard states that Sir Edward Grey has telegraphed to the British ambassador in St. Petersburg for full information as to the Bielostok massacre.

THE RADICALS AND CHINESE LABOUR.

London, June 20.

Radical dissatisfaction with the Government's Chinese policy on the Rand culminated in a deputation to Sir Henry Campbell-Bannerman, representing 166 members of the House of Commons. They demanded the stoppage of the importation of Chinese and the deportation of those at present working on the Rand. Sir Henry Campbell-Bannerman, replying in general terms, said that if necessary, the Government would issue a clearer repatriation proclamation. In any case it could not agree to the experiment being unduly prolonged.

THE JEWISH MASSACRES.

Newspapers of all shades of opinion urge the impossibility of an Anglo-Russian understanding in view of the massacres at Bielostok. The papers sympathise with the Labourites demand that the Government should cancel the Kronstadt naval demonstration.

The Daily Telegraph hopes that no further loan will be granted to Russia.

NON-CONFORMISTS AND MR. BIRRELL.

The Rt. Hon. Augustine Birrell, Minister for Education, has received a Nonconformist deputation, who threatened to continue the policy of "passive resistance" unless Clause IV. of the Education Bill is withdrawn.

A WEARY CABINET.

The Rt. Hon. Mr. Asquith, Chancellor of the Exchequer, has intimated that the Government desired to adjourn on the 4th of August.

[BY SPECIAL ARRANGEMENT WITH THE "JAPAN ADVERTISER."]

GERMANY SUSPECTS JAPAN-AMERICAN AGREEMENT.

San Francisco, June 21.

A great deal of comment has been aroused in European and American commercial circles by a statement which is said to emanate from the Court at Berlin, to the effect that it suspects a secret agreement between the United States Government and Japan apportioning the trade of the Pacific.

England does not place any credence in the statement, claiming that Germany, realizing that the United States and Japan control the trade of the Pacific, has spread the report of a Japan American secret agreement, to prepare the way for a graceful withdrawal from the trade.

TWELVE MILLIONS AT FRISCO.

San Francisco, June 21.

President Roosevelt, speaking on behalf of the Federal Government, has promised to deposit the sum of twelve million dollars in United States bonds with the Banks now doing business in San Francisco, such money to be applied towards necessary and useful reconstruction of the City. Secretary of the Treasury Shaw states that he is ready to deposit the funds immediately on receipt of authority from the Senate, which is expected within a few days.

ALLEGED FRAUD IN HANDLING SUPPLIES.

San Francisco, June 21.

A nasty scandal has been started in this city by an action in the courts, brought by a number of refugees against the Citizens Relief Committee.

It is alleged that grafting and fraud have been carried on to a considerable extent in the handling of relief supplies which have been pouring in from all over the country, that several members of the citizens Relief Committee have taken advantage of their friends.

(BY SPECIAL ARRANGEMENT WITH THE "ASAHI SHIMBUN.")

RUSSIAN DISCONTENT.

London, June 15.

The St. Petersburg Bourse is terribly depressed. The provincial situation is worse. Revolutionary outbreaks in the Baltic provinces are apparently imminent.

GERMANY'S ISOLATION.

In Berlin considerable attention has been excited by the published statement of the Vice-President of the Reichstag that the present position of Germany is one of splendid isolation despite all the Kaiser's strenuous efforts.

RUSSIA INVOKES ASSISTANCE.

London, June 17.

It is rumoured in St. Petersburg that the Russian Government is negotiating with Germany and Austria-Hungary with a view to joint action in case of an uprising in the western provinces.

NEW GERMAN TACTICS.

London, June 18.

It is stated in Berlin that the new infantry regulations embody the experience gained in connexion with the wars in the Far East and in South Africa. Open order evolutions in drill will take precedence of the old close order formations. The greatest pains will be devoted to developing the capacity of individuals for independent action and also as to the formation of the firing line. The men will be taught to judge distances for themselves.

MUTINY IN RUSSIA.

London, June 21.

The Bolkesovsky regiment has mutinied at Riatzan and has killed several of its officers. Disaffection is reported amongst the guards regiments. The Ministers have all expressed a wish to resign. The Tzar is still undecided.

ITCHING HUMOURS

SPEEDY CURE TREATMENT FOR EVERY HUMOUR.

Bathe the affected parts with hot water and CUTICURA SOAP, to cleanse the skin and scalp of crusts and scales, and soften the thickened cuticle. Dry, without hard rubbing, and apply CUTICURA OINTMENT freely to allay itching, irritation, and inflammation, and soothe and heal, and lastly take CUTICURA RESOLVENT PILLS, to cool and cleanse the blood. This pure, sweet, and wholesome treatment affords instant relief, permits rest and sleep, and points to a speedy, permanent, and economical cure of the most torturing, disfiguring, itching, burning, and scaly skin, scalp, and blood humours, eczemas, rashes, and irritations, from infancy to age, with loss of hair, when all else fails.

MILLIONS USE CUTICURA SOAP

Assisted by CUTICURA OINTMENT, for preserving, purifying, and beautifying the skin, for cleansing the scalp of crusts, scales, and dandruff, and the stopping of falling hair, for softening, whitening, and soothing red, rough, and sore hands, for baby rashes, itchings, and chafings, and for all the purposes of the toilet, bath, and nursery. Millions of Women use CUTICURA SOAP in the form of baths for annoying irritations, inflammations, and excoriations, for too free or offensive perspiration, in the form of washes for ulcerative weaknesses, and for many sanative, antiseptic purposes which readily suggest themselves to women, especially mothers.

CUTICURA RESOLVENT PILLS, CHOCOLATE COATED,

Are a new, tasteless, odourless, economical substitute for the celebrated Liquid CUTICURA RESOLVENT, as well as for all other blood purifiers and humour cures. Put up in screw-cap pocket vials containing 60 doses. CUTICURA PILLS are alterative, antiseptic, tonic, and digestive, and beyond question the purest, sweetest, most successful and economical blood and skin purifiers, humour cures, and tonic-digestives, yet compounded.

CUTICURA RESOLVENT is sold throughout the world. Australian Depot: R. Towns & Co., Sydney. British Depot: 27-28, Chancery Lane, London. French Depot: 4 Rue de la Paix, Paris. Potter, Davis and Co., Sole Proprietors, Boston, U.S.A.

SHARE REPORT.

Yokohama, June 23, 1906

LOCAL STOCKS.—The improvement noted in my last report has continued. A large general business has again resulted at advancing rates during the interval. Kirin Breweries continue to advance, a few shares are on offer at yen 145; as mentioned in my former report a better feeling prevails in the market, and an improvement in rates for this stock may be expected. Grand Hotels have found buyers at yen 235. Helms have improved and been placed at yen 90—closing in further request. Engine and Iron Works are wanted at yen 120. Langfeldts are without change. Club Hotels continue weak at yen 75. Oriental Hotels, Kobe, buyers of ordinary shares at yen 75. Y. U. Club debentures buyers at yen 108. Raub Mines are wanted at $3. THE Noroe Vremya announces the death of Major-General Constantin Constantinovitch Schwerin, who served with distinction during the war with Japan, when he commanded the Artillery of the Third Siberian Army Corps. He was particularly successful in the engagements round Liao-yang.

A few French capitalists and some Japanese have established a joint-stock association for the purpose of supplying wooden articles. The factory was established at Taikachi, in Miyasaki prefecture utilizing water-power. Of the capital of yen 950,000 the French have invested yen 800,000 and the Japanese the remainder.

OWING to contracts from San Francisco on account of the reconstruction of the city, the price of cement in Japan has advanced considerably, ordinary grade which was yen 3.40 or 3.50 per cask being now yen 4.50 on an average. The Asano, Aichi, and other cement companies have special contracts to keep them going for ten years.

A TAIPEH telegram reports that the Formosan Government has decided to burn the native street of Yehochieh in Takao where cases of plague are frequently reported, the area including two hundred and sixteen houses. It is said that the Ladies Benevolent Society of Formosa intend to build two hundred houses in the town for the reception of the poor people.

ACCORDING to the Jiji, the re-organization of the Kwantung Administrative Office will shortly be proclaimed. As the result of the alteration, the title of Sotoku or Governor-General will be replaced by Totoku or Commander of Defences. It was understood between Japan and Russia, adds the same paper, that neither Power should employ the former appellation in Manchuria.

Two men attacked three policemen on the night of June 22nd at the village of Omei, in Chiba Prefecture, and killed two of them. One of the assailants was arrested on Sunday at Asahi-machi near the place where the affair occurred. A Chiba telegram adds that the murderers broke into the house of a wealthy farmer residing in the village of Omei and stole several articles. They were on their way back when the police met them.

KOREA.

Friday, June 22.

Mr. Li Pon-rai, Vice-Minister of Foreign Affairs, whose arrest in connexion with the recent disturbances has already been noted, would appear to have been one of the most active fomenters of the insurrection. The evidence hitherto collected proves him, it is said, to have been concerned not only in the provincial riots, but also in the plot for concluding a secret treaty with Russia to drive the Chinese out of the so-called island of Hando. He enjoyed an exceptional measure of the Sovereign's favour and had control of the court funds, and through him a sum of 100,000 yen was conveyed to Hseung-mun by way of defraying expenses on account of the Hando scheme.

There is naturally much curiosity to know what policy Marquis Ito will adopt in view of these incidents. But His Excellency does not appear to have given any indications. The Asahi Shimbun says that one of those who assembled to bid the distinguished statesman farewell when he left Oiso on the 20th instant, remarked to him that something like a crisis in the relations between the two Empires had occurred and that their future relations would be largely affected by the line now taken. He conjured the Marquis to adopt a policy such as would completely re-assure the people of Japan. To this the Marquis smilingly replied that his policy was already fixed and that evidences of it would soon be seen after his return to Seoul. The Yoroden Choho alleges that the Resident General has resolved to cut down to the root of the disease, but we suspect that statement to be mainly conjectural. Our own opinion is that the Marquis will insist peremptorily on an effectual separation between the Court and the Administration, but will not take any steps to disturb the stability of the Throne.

Meanwhile the Korean Cabinet has resolved that the police force must be increased. Mr. Oka, chief of the police attached to the Residency-General, who is now on a visit to Tokyo, is represented by the Jiji Shimpō as stating that public peace and good order are now with difficulty preserved in Korea by Japanese gendarmes and soldiers only, and that in the interior the Korean administrative police are conspicuous by their absence. Such a state of affairs is obviously unendurable, and the plain remedy lies in increasing the police force. At present there are only 100 Japanese constables in the employment of the Korean Government, and 250 in the service of the Residency-General. Upon the latter force devolves the duty of guarding the settlement and consequently only a moiety of them are available for general duty. Mr. Oka thinks that the force attached to the Residency-General should be doubled, and that the Korean Government should add some 500 or 600 Japanese police to the number now employed, so that the total increment of Japanese would be about 800. Further, the Korean constables should receive an addition of 1,500. With such augmentations it would be possible, he believes, to relieve the gendarmes and the troops of duties which do not properly devolve on them. This policy appears to have become known to the public now only, but there are indications that it was adopted some time ago by the authorities for several days ago there appeared in the Japanese Official Gazette a notification indicating the qualifications that must be insisted on in choosing police constables for service in Korea.

Saturday, June 23.

It is rumoured in Seoul that the examination of Cho Ik-hyon, the insurgent leader, and his associates has disclosed the fact that they received a considerable sum of money from a eunuch named Hong Chai-pang, whose duties gave him constant access to the Throne. It would appear from the evidence thus far collected that in the Administration the main fomenters of the insurrection were Min Kyong-sik, Vice-Minister of the Household, Li Pon-rai, Vice-Minister of the Interior, Min Kyu-sik, who seems to be a general officer serving in the War Office, and Min Pyong-hun, a member of the Privy Council. Between these men and the Emperor the direct link was the eunuch Hong Chai-pang, who is said to enjoy a full measure of the Sovereign's confidence, and on the insurgents' side the connexion was with the eminent scholar Kim Hseung-mun. The whole plot seems to have been now unravelled. It has also been proved that Min Yong-hwi, head-man of Hai-mi, whither the insurgent leader Min Chyong-sik fled after the shattering of his party at Hong-ju, supplied the rebels with stores and ammunition. He has been told off for trial by a court martial. The other leader of the insurrection, Cho Ik-hyon, who was arrested at Sun-chhang by the Korean troops, would appear to have been in direct communication with the Court.

Marquis Ito was to reach Seoul on the evening of the 23rd inst. His Excellency proceeded from Bakan by the war-vessel Oki no shima (former Apraxin).

A collision between Japanese and Koreans is reported from Kil-ju in Hamgyong-do. Four Japanese are missing.

Sunday, June 24.

Another official has been arrested in Seoul as a consequence of the revelations obtained at the examination of those already in detention. It is Mr. Cho Nam-song of the Household Department. He is said to have been a coadjuter.

It appears that only the vigilance of the Japanese authorities saved Seoul from being the scene of more than one serious disturbance. A plot had been formed to attack and destroy the Japanese settlement on the 16th instant during the absence of all the principal Japanese and Korean officials at a railway fête in Yong-san. The projectors of this attack had until then been ignorant of the arrests made in Seoul and elsewhere, and it was a desire to avenge these arrests that prompted them to precipitate action. Just as General Hasegawa was stepping into the train for Yong-san, intelligence of the rioters' purpose reached him, and arrangements to defeat it were made forthwith. On the 18th another project was formed for the rescue of the prisoners from durance, but the Japanese police succeeded in getting timely notice of this also. We gather that in each case the military preparations were so effective that the would-be insurgents were completely deterred.

Marquis Ito reached Seoul on the evening of the 23rd instant, and was met at the station by General Hasegawa, Mr. Pak Che-sun (Prime Minister) and some hundreds of officials and private individuals.

Monday, June 25.

Further enquetes are reported from the north of Kyongsan-do, and the south of Kangwon-do. The Korean troops appear to be either unable or unwilling to deal with these troubles and it is probable that the Japanese will have to undertake the duty.

A telegram from Nakdong, near Fusan, says that there are signs of disquiet at Yoichlion. On the 18th instant a body of insurgents numbering forty attacked the offices of the Il Ching-hoi at the latter place and wounded five members of the association. These insurgents openly profess a determination to extirpate the Il Ching-hoi and the Japanese. Consequently a force of eleven Japanese gendarmes has been sent from Nakdong to deal with them.

We may explain that there are two principal political associations in Korea, namely the Wi Pyon, or self-called "loyal troops," and the Il Ching-hoi, or "party of progress." Japanese sympathies are naturally with the latter, and Japan's foreign enemies do not hesitate to accuse her of giving money for the support of the Il Ching-hoi, or even of having been instrumental in procuring the organization of the party, which of course they describe in most contemptuous terms. The Wi Pyon are thorough conservatives whose platform seems to be the preservation of everything old and the expulsion of the Japanese from Korea with other foreigners thrown in. It was mainly owing to information furnished by members of the Il Ching-hoi that the recent plot was discovered, and they also are said to have aided largely in enabling the Japanese authorities to forestall and avert the projected destruction of the settlement in Seoul and the murder of its inhabitants.

It is stated that Cho Nam-sang, the sixth high official arrested in connexion with the insurrection, had been "wanted" for some time. It is also stated that the Il Ching-hoi having been instrumental in furnishing proofs against these officials, the Minister of Justice is planning to bring about the seizure of the leaders of that party, not, says the telegram (Hochi Shimbun) that any breach of the law can be charged against them, but that if in custody, they might be used as instruments for mitigating the procedure against the implicated officials.

There has been another case of stone-throwing at Marquis Ito. It happened as the train carrying the Marquis was passing Anyang (?) station on the Seoul-Fusan railway on the 23rd. The Marquis was not hurt. Three men have been arrested on suspicion.

The Jiji Shimpō's Seoul correspondent wires that the Korean budget for next fiscal year will show a deficit of over a million and a half of yen. The revenue remains at its old figure, namely, 8 millions, but the expenditures total 8,700,000 yen, there being many appropriations on account of progressive undertakings. In addition there is a sum of 940,000 yen on account of the country's foreign debts. A deficit of 1,640,000 yen is not very formidable as to actual dimensions, but it assumes a different character when we observe that it represents more than twenty per cent. of the aggregate income. In fact, the parallel in Japan's case, for example, would be a deficit of some 60 millions. There can be no doubt that under Japanese management the State income of Korea will soon develop very largely. Even on the assumption that the whole of the present revenue is derived from taxes, it would appear that the nation are not paying more than 53 sen per head, which is as though the Japanese Treasury were receiving from all sources an income of only some 25 million yen. Korea, according to the latest available returns, has a population of 15,289,000. It is an eloquent tribute to the miserable condition of the country and to the gross mismanagement of its rulers that its resources should be in such a curiously undeveloped condition. The Japanese may be trusted to alter this state of affairs.

Two Japanese experts, Messrs. Nagata and Michiye, have visited and explored the valley of the Yalu River and have made an estimate of the probable profits of the China-Japan Timber Company which is to be formed under the provisions of the last Peking Convention. They put the cost of a raft of 500 trees at the following:—

	Yen.
Labour of felling timber and forming raft.....	366.00
Sustenance of these labourers .....	152.50
Raft-men (3).....	27.00
Carriers (10).....	80.00
Sustenance of Raft-men and Carriers..	49.00
Hire of one ox .....	60.00
Recompense to contractors (20% of expenses) .....	146.90
Total .....	881.40
Selling price of raft .....	1,320.00
Nett profit per raft .....	438.60
Total profit on 3,000 rafts (per annum) ..	1,315,800.00
Business Expenses .....	108,800.00
Establishment Expenses.....	319,000.00

Tuesday, June 26.

The apprehension of Li Pon-rai seems to have much distressed the Emperor of Korea. So at least we gather from an interesting letter which its Seoul correspondent sends to the Asahi Shimbun. Li held the post of Vice-Minister of Foreign Affairs, but he also had the direction of the Court's finance, a position formerly occupied by Li Yong-ik, and he enjoyed the fullest measure of the Sovereign's confidence. It was through his hands that the sum of a hundred thousand yen passed on its way to Kim Hseung-mun, for the purposes of the Hando programme. When Li's arrest became known in the Palace the Emperor is said to have summoned the Minister of War, and having blamed him severely for allowing Li to fall into the hands of the Japanese, ordered him to take measures at once for his release. But it would appear that the Minister, Li Keun-thak, shared the umbrage felt by some of his colleagues on account of the great favour which Li Pon-rai enjoyed at Court, and consequently the Emperor's behest did not arouse its recipient to very strenuous exertions. Nothing practical could have been effected at any rate. The whole affair illustrates more forcibly than ever the close connexion still existing between the Court and the Administration, in spite of the efforts hitherto made to distinguish them. Thus it must have been observed by any one following events closely that whereas the insurgents at Hong-ju made a stubborn resistance and suffered very severely at the hands of the Japanese troops, those at Sun-chhang surrendered at once and without striking a blow to the Korean soldiers. The facts are said to be that whereas the Japanese Authorities had again and again urged the Korean Government to vigorously undertake the duty of restoring order, the only response was a plea of financial inability, the Government being really favourable to the insurrection and being also persuaded that the Japanese would not resort to force. These theories and excuses were completely disposed of by the result of the Hong-ju attack, and then suddenly the Korean Government fell into a panic lest its collusion should be discovered, an issue very likely to be consummated if the Japanese pushed their military operations and succeeded in capturing the insurgent leaders. Therefore it was arranged that a surrender should be made at Sun-chhang, which would serve the double purpose of re-habilitating the reputation of the Government and preventing the leaders from coming under Japanese jurisdiction. It was thus that Choi Ik-hyon and 12 others were apprehended at Sun-chhang, and the expectation then was that the examination of Choi would be conducted by the Korean Authorities in such a manner as to avoid all entangling revelations. But the Japanese defeated this scheme by demanding the transfer of the prisoners to their keeping so that the investigation might proceed pari passu with that of the men captured at Hong-ju. Choi Ik-hyon is an old man of 70. He cannot walk without the aid of a stick but his spirit is indomitable. Bitterly resenting the fact that he is in Japanese hands, he utterly refuses to admit their right of jurisdiction or to answer any questions, and if a Korean interpreter be used, he abuses the man so vehemently for want of patriotism that the interpreter collapses and declines to discharge his functions any longer. Choi seems to be convinced that his death is imminent. He declines to eat, asking what useful end can be served by nourishing a life which is to be laid down in a few days, but apparently this refusal is rather capricious than studied for he presently purchases food—even Japanese food—on his own account. As the investigation proceeds clearer and clearer evidences are said to be procured that the Government is implicated as well as the Court, and that the idea was to foment troubles analogous to those planned by the Min family in 1894-5 through the agency of the Tonghak. The mood of the Korean Cabinet is illustrated by its attitude towards the new mining and emigration regulations. Both of these were drafted and passed by the Residency General, but they await the endorsement of the Cabinet and the latter simply sat idle. An idea of the ignorance pervading Korean official circles may be gathered from the belief entertained about the emigration question, namely, that the purpose of the Japanese is to get all the Koreans out of Korea and thus to people the peninsula with their own nationals. The whole story confirms what is often said by Japanese observers, namely, that Korean statesmen are compounded of two elements only, superstition and intrigue, and that to expect them to change is like waiting for the Yellow River to become limpid.

Meanwhile Marquis Ito's return to Seoul seems to have set things moving. The Mining and the Emigration Regulations were at once settled and promulgated, by the very simple manoeuvre of inviting the six Korean Ministers to the Residency General and discussing matters with them. This conference seems to have been a lengthy affair. It met in the forenoon, and Marquis Ito devoted a considerable time to hearing statements as to what had gone on in his absence, and offering counsel to the Ministers. In the afternoon the above two bodies of law received Korean official approval, and several other important questions are said to have been either settled or carried within sight of settlement.

The Fiji Shimpō's Seoul correspondent wires that the insurgent leader, Choi Ik-hyon, maintained his defiant bearing throughout his preliminary examination. He mistook, or pretended to mistake, the Chief of the Gendarmes for Marquis Ito, and charging him with having purloined the flesh and skin of Korea, leaving only the bones, demanded that he should at once return the stolen property. Choi is evidently a fine old fellow, and one can not but regret that such men should be interested in preserving a Government and a Court like those of Korea. His preliminary examination was concluded on the afternoon of the 25th, and he was remanded for trial by court martial.

The man who threw a stone at Marquis Ito's carriage when the train was passing a point some ten miles from An-yang, was immediately arrested and found to be a farmer. He frankly states that he threw the stone because he knew of the Resident General's presence in the train. It was a man of the same locality who threw the stone last winter, but in that case there was the excuse of inebriety. It is thought that in the present instance the offender was instigated, and every effort will be made to clear up that point. As for the stone-thrower, the leniency shown last winter will probably not be repeated in his case.

Wednesday, June 27.

The return of Marquis Ito to Seoul seems to have produced a very salutary effect. So at least we learn from telegrams to the press of Tokyo, but it is difficult to say whether this intelligence is based on actual facts or whether it merely reflects the restored confidence of the correspondents themselves. We should be disposed to say that the trouble was at all events scotched after the affair at Hong-ju and the surrender of Choi Ik-hyon and his comrades at Sun-chhang. Meanwhile another insurgent leader whose name we can not clearly decipher, a public inspector, has put himself on board ship and fled to Shanghai, doubtless finding that the situation was becoming too hot. Min Chyong-sik, the leader of the Hong-ju insurgents, who escaped in the first place to Haimi where he was succoured by the local authorities, is now said to be at Chihong-san, where the remnants of his followers have gathered about him.

Marquis Ito, attended by Baron Shibusawa and Mr. Furuya, is to be received by the Emperor in audience on the 28th inst. Mr. Furuya, we presume, is to make his farewell bow as he proceeds to the Legation in Brussels.

A draft law for the development of Education in Korea has been deliberated on and adopted by the Residency General and will now be submitted to the Korean Government. It provides for five kinds of schools—ordinary schools, high schools, special schools, practical schools and language (Japanese) schools.

Eight Japanese officers—five of infantry, and one each of cavalry, artillery and engineers—have arrived in Seoul to undertake the duties of military instructors to the Koreans.

Thursday, June 28.

The name of the seventh high official said to have been arrested in connexion with the insurrection proves to be Min Yong-chon, public inspector of the southern part of Kyongsan-do. But the latest news shows that he managed to effect his escape to Shanghai. It will have been observed that the leaders of this insurrection belong, for the most part, to the Min and Cho families. The Min family is that of the late Queen.

The Fiji Shimpō reverts to its old argument that there is absolute necessity for clearly partitioning the Court from the Administration in Korea. Intrigues are not limited to this little empire: they are the common property of all countries. But the Fiji is persuaded that in no other country do the records show such repeated complicity between the Court and disturbers of the peace, or such breaches of imperial faith. Our contemporary mentions an illustration which will be new to our readers. When the Japanese troops were marching against Pyong-yang in the war of 1894, Korea being Japan's publicly declared ally, the Korean Court sent a secret envoy to the Chinese Army at Pyong-yang with a proposal that the Japanese should be suddenly attacked by the Chinese in front and by the Korean troops in the rear. Evidences of this treasonable correspondence were found among the Chinese archives after the battle. Of such stuff is the Korean Court made. Nevertheless the Jiji does not recommend any heroic measure against the Throne. It merely insists that there should be established such a division between the Court and the Administration as shall make the former powerless for evil.

It is alleged by Tokyo journals that the Residency General has determined to abolish the advisory system in Korea. We should not be at all surprised by such a change. Korea wants something very different from advice which she is free to adopt or to reject as she pleases. Besides, in view of the authority exercised by the Residency General, the advice would come much more effectively from that department.

It is stated that the new mining regulations in Korea closely resemble those now in operation in Japan, and that they will go into force from the 1st of September.

The Korean local officials are to be deprived of competence to employ the troops in their district at their own discretion. No doubt this function will be surrounded by the safeguards considered necessary in all civilized countries.

HANDO.

There appears to be a not unnatural want of information about the place called "Han-do," which has been mentioned more than once in connexion with the recent troubles in Korea. We say "not unnatural" because accessible maps showing the geography of north-eastern Korea and southern Kirin are few and far between. Ascending the Tumen River and passing Kyongheung and Kyongwan, one reaches Onsieng at a distance of about 75 miles from the mouth. Here the river divides into two streams, which, after running for a time at nearly right angles, turn westward in almost parallel directions, the southern branch retaining the name "Tumen" and the northern being called "Hailan." These two streams enclose an area some 75 miles long and 38 broad, and to this area the name "Han-do" is given. It is not an island, as the name implies, but being embraced by rivers on three sides the people learned to assign to it an insular character. In former times when the Chinese and the Koreans had to delimit their frontiers and when the immediate proximity of two States was counted a perilous condition, China chose the Hailan for the southern boundary of the province of Kirin, and named the river "Funchieh-kiang" (boundary dividing stream), while the Koreans chose the Tumen for their northern frontier, and both agreed that the intervening area—called by the Chinese "Chien-tao" and by the Koreans "Han-do"—should remain uninhabited by the subjects of either contracting party. But the district being highly fertile—as a matter of fact the Russians drew large supplies of grain and cattle from it during the recent war—this veto did not long receive practical recognition. Little by little Koreans and Chinese crossed over the two rivers and settled in the region between them. This was the state of affairs when Russia began to interest herself actively in Manchuria. She established a military station at Hunchun (north of the Tumen and some miles to the south-east of the latter's junction with the Hailan), whence she ultimately sent a commission to examine and report upon the conditions existing in the interfluvial space, her contention being that the region belonged properly to China; in other words, that it formed part of Manchuria. This commission crossed the Tumen at Hoiryong—a place heard of during the recent war—and proceeded by the Kirin highway as far as Hwalung-ku, which is situated near the centre of the region. There they found a number of Korean settlers but no Chinese, and their representations setting forth this fact induced Peking to raise a question which led to the despatch of two Chinese delimitation commissions in 1886 and 1887, both of which returned re infecta. Nevertheless, in 1890, the Korean Government, yielding to Chinese urgings (said to have been inspired by Russia), issued orders through the local headmen that all Korean subjects must retire from the region unless they became naturalized Chinese. To give practical effect to this order the bridge over the Tumen at Hoiryong was destroyed and the ferry-boats elsewhere were burned. Higher up the stream, however, at Mushan, the Tumen is fordable, and consequently it did not offer any obstacle to the passage of Korean settlers, who continued to exploit the region. Dr. Kofuji, who recently travelled in these regions and from whose reports we draw this information, says that Han-do has an area approximately equal to that of Kyushu, that Hoiryong owes its rank as an important station on the Kirin trade-route to the fact of the interfluvial region's fertility, and that even though Unkwi Bay and Anna Bay—on the north-east coast of Korea southward of the Tumen's embouchure—be opened to trade as is contemplated, little business would be done there unless traffic on the Hoiryong Hwahunku-Kirin route were free. It is plain from all these facts that Han-do possesses no small importance, and we can understand why the instigators of the recent anti-Japanese insurrection in Korea thought to enlist Russia's active assistance by seeking to renew her interest in Han-do. There is no evidence whatever that Russia entertained the scheme, nor do we quite clearly understand in what terms it was submitted to her. But as Han-do appears not unlikely to figure hereafter in Far-Eastern questions, the above information may be worth digesting.

TAIREN.

The idea of making Tairen (Dalny) a free port is strongly supported by public opinion in Japan. It is recognised that three places are competing for the advantage of recognition as ports of entry for Manchuria; namely, Vladivostok, Tairen and Newchwang. Among the three Tairen is certainly the best situated. Vladivostok and Newchwang labour under the great disadvantage of being ice-bound for several months in the year whereas Tairen is always open, and Newchwang is further handicapped by its poor harbour which gives access to nothing in the shape of ships displacing more than 2,000 tons. But Newchwang has one point strongly in its favour, namely, that it lies at the mouth of the Liao River and is consequently the terminus of Manchuria's greatest water-way. To neutralize that superiority the Japanese railway, as the Asahi Shimbun justly observes, must carry goods at 1 sen per ton per mile, instead of exacting 3 or 4 sen as is done at present, and the lowest possible scale of charges must be adopted for wharfage and storage accommodation. Of course a very great deal will depend on the arrangements effected for the junction at Changchun—that is to say, a very great deal so far as the traffic to Europe is concerned. It is more than probable that the Russians if they are bent upon securing for Vladivostok the position of Far-Eastern terminus of this traffic, will endeavour to throw every possible obstacle in the way of connecting facilities at the point of junction. It will be for Japan, when negotiating her new commercial treaty with Russia, to obtain the insertion of such provisions as will nullify that danger. Already Vladivostok has the advantage of priority. Every day advertisements appear promising to the travelling public easy and rapid overland transport to Europe via Vladivostok, whereas the world remains ignorant as to whether and when the Dalny route will be opened. If there is any way—and there ought to be—of correcting or diminishing that disadvantage, it should be seized at once.

SETTING THE PACE.

Reading in Japanese papers that the Municipality of Tokyo intends to entertain the British Squadron under Admiral Moore on its arrival in Yokohama, we are constrained to ask whether Japan is not setting for herself too high a pace in these matters. The Squadron is not coming here on any special mission. It visits Yokohama in the ordinary routine of its duties, just as it visits any other port within the limits of the Far-Eastern station. Displays of hospitality and interchanges of courtesy are very agreeable and very picturesque, but they lose much of their effect if they be made too common. It is not our opinion alone that the tendency of the time is to overdo this kind of thing. Especially does the criticism apply to the reception sometimes given to individuals in Tokyo. We are precluded from mentioning names but we may say without any breach of etiquette that in certain cases within the past twelve months Japanese hospitality was exercised so lavishly as to lose some of its graces. It is impossible to maintain the standard that is being established, and the first inevitable lapses from it are more than likely to be construed as instances of neglect. That is an evident danger. The waste of money ought also to be a consideration but unless we mistake the character of the Japanese they are not likely to attach much weight to that objection. Probably their feeling with regard to the British Squadron is that as an extraordinary welcome was given in England to the crews of the two new Japanese battleships, the Katori and the Kasuga, therefore the earliest occasion should be seized to return the compliment. These crews, however, were the first Japanese sailors who visited England after the war, and no one can be surprised that they were treated as heroes. Of course the Tokyo Municipality's hospitable intentions can not be abandoned and will be highly appreciated in England as well as by British subjects the world over, but it appears to us that the time has come to reflect seriously whether in these matters, Japan is not allowing herself to be carried away by the emotional tendency of the age, and whether her courtesies would not be more valued were they less profusely exercised.

CHINA.

Saturday, June 23.

The news is confirmed that owing to a modification of France's demands a settlement of this problem has been achieved. It is stated, however, (Hochi Shimbun's correspondence) that the people of Kwangsi are exasperated at the idea of having to pay even the reduced indemnity—222,000 dollars—and are threatening to open legal proceedings, engaging the services of a foreign barrister. The Peking Government is doing everything in its power to placate this recalcitrant spirit, but it is not unlikely that Peking will in the end be obliged to saddle itself with the burden of a portion of the indemnity.

Monday, June 25.

A reversal has now taken place in the nature of the reports from Peking as to the Russo-Chinese negotiations. We were told a few days ago that the latest tableau was Russia in a hurry and China insouciant, but now rumour alleges that whereas the Waiwupu has telegraphed to its Representative in St. Petersburg asking him to ascertain the intentions of the Russian Government in keeping M. Pokotiloff without instructions, M. Pokotiloff himself has left Peking for a summer resort. It is impossible to decipher the truth amid this mass of contradictions, but evidently the negotiations are delayed from some cause or other. Perhaps the simple explanation is that the Russian Government is too much engrossed with domestic affairs to think about Manchuria.

The Nichi Nichi's Moji correspondent transmitting news obtained from a military officer who has just arrived from China, states that the Chinese Authorities are now considering the question of the armament of the troops. It appears that the forces under the command of Viceroy Yuan and Viceroy Chang are armed with modern rifles of the same calibre, but the other provincial armies all carry old fashioned weapons. To establish uniformity is essential, but the question is what type of rifle to adopt. Hitherto the German type has been used and to change it would involve much expense. Nevertheless there is talk of adopting the Japanese type.

According to the Peking correspondent of the Asahi Shimbun the British Consul in Hankow has reported to his Government that the anti-foreign feeling in China does not extend to the Japanese. These, on the contrary, are favoured by all classes, including the students who have studied in Japan, and against such a marked mood of partiality it is useless for the merchants of other countries to struggle. This view is said to be entertained by many residents of Shanghai also, and even Dr. Morrison is mentioned as a supporter of it. The Asahi's correspondent, however, remarks that the statement can not be accepted as applying to the students who have returned from Japan, since they are openly hostile to Japan. We presume that this comment refers to the students who left Japan last year in consequence of the issue of regulations which they considered derogatory, for it would be manifestly incredible were any one to affirm that anti-Japanese sentiment permeates the whole body of the Chinese students who have been educated in Tokyo. What we fail to see, however, is why there should be either complaint on one side or disavowal on the other if such a state of philo-Japanese feeling exists in China. Protests will not amend it and denials can not alter it. So far as we can ascertain, official circles in Tokyo do not place serious credence in such a state of affairs, however pleased they might be to believe it; or at any rate do not regard the mood as of lasting importance. For readers of history there is no difficulty in conceiving that records have effect in China as elsewhere, and that, since it has been Japan's good fortune not to make an ugly record in China, she may now be reaping the fruits of the fact. She has had few tradal disputes with China, has not been obliged to exact frequent indemnities for murdered missionaries, has not habitually shown the high hand in her dealings with the Middle Kingdom, has not suffered from the misfortune of a local press which seldom finds a good word to say of China or the Chinese, and has, on the other hand, just fought a great and brilliant war to rescue three Chinese provinces from the hands of an apparent aggressor. These things must tell, to say nothing of identity of script, similarity of ancient civilization, propinquity, and a common origin. It will be amusing but not at all extraordinary should Japan's critics lay it to her charge that she is liked in China better than they are.

In connexion with the approaching resumption of the civil government of Newchwang by the Chinese, a question has arisen as to the cost and the completion of certain roads and bridges undertaken by the Japanese during the period of their military occupation. These works are said to be essential to the town's well-being, and it would be at once unfortunate from a public point of view were they abandoned and unfair from a Japanese point of view were they taken over without any compensation. It is therefore proposed that the Customs dues collected by the Japanese during their occupation, which are now lying in the Specie Bank, should be devoted to re-imbursing the outlay hitherto incurred on account of these works and meeting the expense of completing them. An agreement in that sense is said (Hochi Shimbun) to have been drafted by the Japanese Legation in Peking during Mr. Uchida's tenure of office, and to have received Chinese approval. It further stipulates that the works shall not be altered or abandoned after the resumption of Chinese administration.

Tuesday, June 26.

It is stated (Jiji Shimpō's correspondence) that the money to be paid in connexion with the Nanchang affair is divided thus:—50,000 yen to the families of the deceased; 10,000 yen to pay the expenses of bringing out their successors, and 20,000 yen for building a new church. These figures aggregate only 80,000 yen, whereas previous reports spoke of French demands having been "reduced" to 222,000. The discrepancy must remain for the present unexplained. It is further agreed that the Governor shall issue an apologetic proclamation, but that the proposed punishment of local magnates shall be abandoned.

A telegram from Hongkong via Shanghai says that Mrs. Aoki, the wife of a member of the Nippon Yusen Kaisha's staff at the former place, has been found lying in the kitchen of her residence with severe wounds in several parts of her body. This outrage is believed to have been the work of burglars.

It appears to be certain that M. Pokotiloff has proceeded to Peitai-ho to escape the hot weather, and that the negotiations with regard to Manchuria will consequently be delayed until the autumn. Writing on this subject the Nichi Nichi quotes "a certain official..." He says that although there has not been any formal cessation of the negotiations they are undoubtedly interrupted. The main difficulty is that whereas a secret agreement was arranged between the Russian military authorities in loco and the Vice-Governor of the Amur region, and whereas M. Pokotiloff seeks to have this agreement ratified in Peking, the Chinese Plenipotentiaries refuse to recognise it at all, their contention being that Mr. Chou had no authority whatever to conclude such a contract. The agreement is said to concede to Russia various important privileges in the Amur region, in Kirin province and in Mongolia, and she is naturally anxious to have these privileges confirmed, whereas China is resolved not to confirm them. The story has one element difficult to understand, namely, that the Vice-Governor of the Amur region should take upon himself to give pledges relating to Kirin and Mongolia which lie outside his jurisdiction. At all events we give the statement for what it may be worth, and we note that rumours to the same effect had previously reached Tokyo from time to time.

Wednesday, June 27.

Each of the 18 provinces of China is sending a commissioner to inspect and report upon the education of Chinese students in Japan and the conditions of their life. These eighteen commissioners will rendezvous in the first place in Shanghai, and will proceed thence to Tokyo. It is expected that they will spend some 3 months in Japan.

We may mention here that the Chinese law students in Tokyo have just made a very fine showing. A batch of 336 entered the Hosei-gakko in October, 1905, with the idea of completing the course of study there in one year. The feat was regarded as virtually impossible by the Japanese faculty, but these Chinese youths proved to be gifted with quite exceptional ability. They had also received an excellent preliminary education, being, for the most part, sons of rich men in southern China. Their number was reduced by 100 in the course of the instruction. No reason for this reduction is given by the Japanese press but we conjecture that the discontent which occurred at the close of 1905 was responsible. At all events 236 went up for the graduation examination, and 230 passed brilliantly, surprising their teachers by the proficiency they displayed. The Chinese Minister attended the graduation ceremony and is said to have congratulated the youths in very warm terms, telling them also that it would be their function on returning home to use their newly acquired knowledge for the promotion of their country's progress. Professor Ume, the head of the School, delivered a somewhat sedative address. He recalled the attention of the graduates to the fact that their country is comparatively weak vis-à-vis foreign nations and that the struggles of the weak invariably end in strengthening the restraints of the strong. Their aim then must be not only to make China strong, but to preach the virtue of patience until she acquires strength. He reminded them of the gradual character of Japan's advance since the Restoration, and altogether his words were calculated to chasten their enthusiasm.

Reports continue to be circulated of Russian encroachments in Mongolia and the Amur region. It is now stated that the Chinese Government has instructed its Representative in St. Petersburg to approach the Foreign Office on the subject.

MANCHURIA.

Saturday, June 23.

The Governor of Mukden has telegraphed to the Peking Government that the Japanese having now evacuated the districts northward of Fushun, this region has been occupied by Chinese forces. In order, however, to avoid all danger of collisions, the Chinese are not allowed to approach nearer to the railway than 20 li (6½ miles). This telegram of the Governor's should be noted. Some publicists continue to write as though Japan were unduly postponing her evacuation of Manchuria and still retaining a large force there in pursuit of a sinister policy. It is scarcely necessary to repeat the frequently elicited comment that nothing done by Japan can possibly find favour in the eyes of a certain class of observers. As a matter of fact the Japanese have strictly complied with the terms of their agreements. They had pledged themselves to retire to the south of the Fakumun-Tiehling-Fushun line by the 1st of June, and on that very day the transfer of all the regions northward of that line to Chinese authority was effected. We who live in Japan know that, in effect, the whole of the army of occupation was withdrawn by the end of March with the exception of two Divisions. What we do not clearly know is whether these Divisions include or do not include the railway guards, but the strong presumption is that they do, and that they include also the garrison of Liaotung. So far as can be judged by outsiders Japan's programme is to keep one Division in Liaotung, its head-quarters presumably at Port Arthur, and one Division broken up into various sections for the purpose of guarding the railway. These two Divisions excepted, the whole army of occupation was withdrawn, as already stated, by the end of March, though the terms of the engagement were that not more than 250,000 troops of either belligerent were to remain in Manchuria after April 15th; not more than 75,000 after October 15th, and not more than the railway guards after April 15th of 1907. The Japanese have thus anticipated the terms of the evacuation by practically a whole year, and if, in the face of that eloquent fact, publicists are still found to accuse them of deliberate tardiness, the accusation is evidently made in entire oblivion of the truth. Turning to the Russian side, it is noticeable that the world labours under complete ignorance as to the dimensions of her processes of evacuation, and against her also charges of bad faith have been preferred. But we have no right to assume bad faith merely because of the absence of assurance to the contrary. Russia is strictly within the letter of the law if she has now not more than 250,000 men in the two northern provinces of Manchuria, and she will be strictly within the letter of the law if she has not more than 75,000 from the 15th of October. There is no evidence whatever that her actual force in those regions is in excess of the conventional limits.

The Tokyo Asahi Shimbun and its Osaka namesake, two papers which are virtually one, are giving another example of their remarkable enterprise. They have chartered the Rosetta, a steamer of 3,800 tons with excellent passenger accommodation, and they offer to make her the means of conveying a body of tourists to Manchuria and Kosea at remarkably small rates. A return ticket, first class, will be 60 yen; second class, 45 yen; third class 27 yen, and steerage 18 yen. These prices are independent of food, on which as much as the passengers please may be spent, but it is announced that those in the first and second classes can have good provisions for 75 sen daily, and those in the two lower classes for 36 sen. The steamer is to leave Yokohama on the 25th of July and the trip is expected to occupy 30 days. There is accommodation for 70 in the first class, 29 in the second, 75 in the third and 200 in the steerage, and when engaging a place the following sums must be paid in advance for the four classes respectively:—12 yen, 10 yen, 5 yen and 4 yen. Certainly the charges are not exorbitant, seeing that even if she gets a full complement of passengers the steamer will earn only 11,140 yen for a month's work.

Monday, June 25.

Our readers are aware that a plan to hold a Japanese exhibition in Mukden was mooted some time ago but that it was reported to have been abandoned owing to some difficulties about State aid. Whether these difficulties have now been overcome in the sense that aid will be granted we do not learn, but at any rate the exhibition project has been revived, and it is now announced that owing to the exertions of Mr. Mizumachi, chief of the Economic Bureau in the Finance Department, and Mr. Hagiwara, Consul-General in Mukden, it will be possible to hold the exhibition in October. Japanese journals, without stating their authority, advise exhibitors to send articles of genuine utility to the display. Cheapness, durability and fitness for the purposes to which they are to be applied—these are the desiderata according to the Hochi, but, for the matter of that, they are the desiderata everywhere and at all times. There is, however, some useful counsel about colours, trade-marks and so forth. We presume that the choice of October is a matter of necessity owing to the delay which has occurred. The original programme contemplated July or August. October will be a somewhat doubtful time for travelling comfortably in Manchuria.

Tuesday, June 26.

We read in the Asahi Shimbun that it has been virtually determined not to give any state guarantee of interest in the case of the South-Manchurian Railway. The method adopted will be this:—A valuation will be made of the line and its appurtenances as well as of the mines, and the amount will represent the Government's share of the railway's capital. Then a committee, which is to be presently appointed, will form an estimate of the sum required for improving the line, building branches, furnishing rolling stock, working the mines, etc., and the public, Japanese and Chinese, as well as the Chinese Government, will be asked to subscribe that amount which will represent the general capital. Then, when accounts of profit and loss are made up, the nett profits will be applied to paying 6 per cent. on the general capital only, the capital of the Japanese Government being left outside unless the sum available for dividend exceeds 6 per cent., when the latter capital will first become eligible for interest. In short, the shares purchased by the general public will be six-per-cent. preference shares. This appears to be an arrangement either very generous on the part of the Japanese Government or signifying great confidence in the prospects of the line. Japanese journals state that the organization of the administrative machinery in Kwanto (Liaotung) has been completed and will be promulgated in a few days. On the whole it will resemble that of Formosa, except that the military section, the foreign affairs section and the executive section will be distinguished. The Governor-General will be a military man, having the rank of General and the status of a Shinin official; and the garrison troops of Liaotung as well as the Railway Guards will be under the control of the military section, whose administration, however, will not extend at all to civil affairs. Simultaneously with the promulgation of this system, a schedule will be published, showing the numerical strength of the Liaotung garrison and the railway guards and the manner of their distribution.

Friday, June 29.

The Jiji Shimpō of Thursday had a cartoon of considerable force, which it entitled "Undertakings in Manchuria." It professed to depict in procession the various classes of Japanese enterprises in Manchuria. In the van of the column marched the Roshi-tai, three girls whose profession it would not be difficult to guess without the aid of the Japanese phrase. Behind them came the Goketsu-tai—the army of heroes—three scoundrels armed with bludgeon, sword and fire-arm, who would be hanged anywhere on the testimony of their faces. Third were the Nurete-tai—the adventurers who with wet palms are ready to catch the wandering grain of rice. Those classes, said the picture, are already in Manchuria. Behind them, in Japan but making their way to the sea in order to cross to the land of promise, were the Mōtan-tai or blind merchants, who were represented as saying, "We want money but we don't know how to get it;" and in the distance were seen the Shian-tai or "thinkers," who spend their time leaning on their money-boxes and thinking instead of working. Our contemporary has a moderate turn of satire.

GERMAN ORDERS.

A very brilliant ceremony took place at the German Embassy on the 25th instant, when Orders bestowed by the Kaiser were handed to several Japanese officers. The principal among the recipients were Field-Marshal Count Nozu, General Terauchi, General Viscount Kodama, Major-Generals Nagaoka and Ueyehara, and Colonel Tachibana. Absence from Tokyo or other causes prevented the attendance of Field-Marshal Nozu, General Kodama and Major-Generals Nagaoka and Ueyehara. The German Chargé d'Affaires presented the Orders, namely, the Grand Cordon of the Red Eagle to Field-Marshal Nozu, General Kodama and General Terauchi, and the Second Class of the same to the other officers. Swords of honour accompanied the Orders. Mr. von Erckert, in an eloquent speech, explained that the gift of swords was confined to the case of officers who had distinguished themselves in war. He said that German officers valued this distinction above all others, and that the Kaiser desired thus to express his high appreciation of the very considerate treatment extended by the Japanese armies in the field to Prince Carl Anton and to other German officers present during the campaign. It was his Majesty's hope that the old relations existing between the Japanese Army and Germany would be confirmed and strengthened by this recognition. General Terauchi made a suitable acknowledgement, declaring his very high sense of the great honour conferred on him, and echoing the hope expressed by the Chargé d'Affaires for the widening and deepening of the relations between the armies of Germany and Japan.

THE JAPANESE MERCANTILE MARINE AFTER THE WAR.

Mr. Iwanaga, one of the managing directors of the Nippon Yusen Kaisha, has been interviewed by the Kizai Zasshi and is reported to have made the following interesting statements:—"A good many vessels were lost during the Russo-Japanese war, but by purchasing, by building and by the sale of prizes of war there has resulted a considerable increase of the mercantile marine as compared with the ante-bellum figures. All these vessels are now engaged in navigation. To specify our Company's services in detail:—On the European and American lines we had to remove our own ships during the war, but by means of chartered steamers we kept up the services, so that no difficulty has been experienced in resuming them. But as several of the vessels employed for the latter purpose have not yet returned, I can not speak of the situation as a whole, though we expect that if not better than before it certainly will not be worse. Turning to the Australia and Bombay lines, the period of the Government's subsidy to the former expired in March last but the subsidy has been renewed for 2 years, and the service has been restored to its state prior to the war. An exceptionally fine vessel, the Nikko Maru, has been added to the ships on this route and the line ought to improve steadily. On the Bombay line the State subsidy came to an end last March, but we are keeping up the service and have added 3 vessels to the 3 previously employed so that there is a regular fortnightly sailing. On this route the Company hopes to deserve well of the cotton spinning industry of Japan, and so long as the latter prospers we shall not make any loss. With regard to the coasting trade in domestic waters, many ships relieved from the service of the State have turned to this enterprise and competition has naturally resulted with its usual concomitant, lowering of freights. Between Awamori and Hakodate the Japan Railway Company has intimated a desire to establish a service of steamers for the better preservation of railway connexions, and our Company has raised no objection. The project has not yet been put into execution, however, but our Company, thinking it right to consult the convenience of passengers and shippers, is now running three steamers daily. On the Vladivostok line the service was restored after the war and for a time there was great activity, but of late goods have been piling up and are sold almost for a song, so that shippers are doing nothing for the moment. With regard to the Shanghai line, very sharp competition has sprung up. The Company's steamers originally employed were requisitioned by the State during the war and we consequently maintained the service with two vessels chartered from Messrs. Butterfield and Swire. On the restoration of peace we replaced on the route the ships formerly employed there, namely, the Hakui and the Kosai and we added to them the Kasuga, terminating at the same time the chartering arrangement with Messrs. Butterfield and Swire. The latter firm, however, did not remove its steamers but kept them still running. Thus competition came about. Freights have consequently been reduced by 20, 30 or even 50 per cent., and a pretty fierce struggle is going on. Our Company has the under-mentioned steamers calling at Shanghai for the better convenience of passengers and shippers of goods, namely:—(1) The vessels (6,000 tons and upwards) of our European line which sail every fortnight and thus touch twice a month at Shanghai. (2) Our American liners (6,000 tons and upwards) which sail once every two weeks, and will now be made to touch at Shanghai both ways. (3) Our Bombay liners (six vessels of from 4,400 to 6,200 tons) which began their fortnightly service in April last, and which called at Shanghai on their outward voyage only, but will now touch there on the home route also, making two more ships for that port. (4) In addition to the above we have opened a line having Yokohama for terminus and proceeding thence via Kobe, Shimonoseki and Shanghai to Hankow. We had three regular sailings on this route, but we are now making arrangements to add three more, namely, the Tairen Maru, the Chiyoda Maru and another suitable ship. (5) There is also to be a steamer plying twice a month between Kobe and Shanghai, and the Satsuma Maru has been temporarily assigned for this service. She left Kobe for the first time on the 14th. All the above are in addition to the regular Yokohama-Shanghai liners, the Hakui, the Kosai and the Kasuga. As to the Swatow-Bankok line, it was monopolized by the North German Lloyds, whose arbitrariness caused, as we learned, considerable inconvenience to passengers and shippers. Therefore by way of one step of development in the domain of maritime enterprise, we took up this service after the war. Naturally competition resulted, but as it has brought much satisfaction to travellers and shippers of goods, we do not intend to abandon it."

In the Nichi Nichi Shimbun we find a somewhat vague statement headed "The Nippon Yusen Kaisha and Foreign Capital." The gist of it is that in the sequel of consultations between Mr. Harriman and certain Japanese financiers, an arrangement has been effected by which the Japanese company is to come into possession of the big steamers Minnesota and Dakota as well as of the good-will of their route. It is added that the completion of this business constituted a main purpose of the Vice-President, Mr. Kato's, present visit to the United States. In the Niroku Shimbun the same subject is alluded to, and we learn from this source that the purchase price of the big steamers is not to be paid immediately. The Shogyo Shimpō, however, denies the statement in toto. It explains that whatever may happen in the future, there is no such intention at present. The Great Northern Company are agents for the Nippon Yusen Kaisha on the other side, and the Japanese Company are agents for the American Company in Japan, an arrangement which has thus far worked quite satisfactorily and which was recently renewed for a period of 10 years. The Shogyo thinks that the fact of renewal has probably been construed into the rumour above detailed.

A telegram to the Fiji Shimpō from Osaka says that the competition between the Nippon Yusen Kaisha and the German Lloyds on the Swatow-Bankok line is now at its keenest. The steamers of the Japanese company are carrying passengers gratis, and the German steamers have followed suit. There are only 3 vessels flying the N. Y. K. flag on the route against 4 German, but the former will be immediately increased to 5.

The competition on the Yokohama-Shanghai line is very warm. Messrs. Butterfield and Swire have three steamers on the line, whereas the Nippon Yusen Kaisha has many vessels calling at both places, so that there is a ship leaving one port for the other nearly every day. Of course it is quite within the competence of the British firm to increase its vessels if it pleases: it has plenty of them at command. Apparently the competition has not produced any very marked effects at Osaka or Kobe, but in Yokohama the competitors are giving rebates of 40 per cent.

MONSIEUR ARCHBISHOP OSOUF.

Wide-spread and profound regret will be caused by the news of Archbishop Osouf's death. The sad event had been expected for many days and the Archbishop himself eagerly awaited the summons; but though his many friends may find a measure of comfort in the thought that his sufferings have come to an end, it will be very long before time begins to soften their sense of loss. Monseigneur Osouf was one of those rare men who seem to have been born without any of the failings of humanity. That his life should have been one continuous sacrifice in the cause of good is a record which, however noble, finds frequent parallels in the annals of the Roman Catholic missionaries in the Far East. But in addition to the self-effacing devotion characteristic of these men, the Archbishop was endowed with a character which commanded the immediate love and reverence of all brought into contact with him, and did more to embellish the creed he followed than the most zealous ministrations or the most earnest propagandism could have done. When we attempt to speak of him we become immediately sensible of the feebleness of language to depict such worth, and even of the sacrilege of essaying the task. It was in the year 1884, if we remember aright, that he came to Tokyo charged with important duties as the Pope's legate, and from the moment of his arrival all nationalities recognised in him an ideal type of Christianity. We trust that some concerted effort will be made to honour his memory, for though he himself would have deprecated anything of the kind, it is unquestionably for the benefit of humanity that the ennobling impression produced by the life of such a man should be preserved as long as possible.

LIFE ASSURANCE.

The advocates of life assurance assert that it is now the most extensive and important of all business. Notwithstanding the fact that on January 1st, 1905, the amount of outstanding assurance in the United States had reached the enormous sum of 25,000,000,000 yen as compared with 212,000,000 yen on January 1st, 1855, the demand continues. Actuaries have recently calculated for the Insurance Press that during the first four months of 1906, one million five hundred thousand new life insurance policies were issued by American life insurance companies. If the new policyholders of January-April, 1906, were formed in files twenty men deep, ten feet apart they would form a procession 142 miles (58 π) long—long enough to reach from the railway station at Hiranuma to Hamamatsu. The people who have bought life assurance in America in the first four months of 1906 exceed in number the population of Osaka and Kyoto combined, and are only 20 per cent. short of the population of Tokyo.

That life assurance is highly valued by thoughtful people is certainly demonstrated beyond doubt by these figures. A large proportion of this business was transacted by the Equitable of the United States.

MUNICIPAL AFFAIRS.

It is as well that the residents of Yokohama should know what the Japanese papers are saying about the question of municipal taxes. Here, then, is a paragraph from the Asahi Shimbun:—"The foreigners of the settlements, under the aegis of the fact that the Hague tribunal remitted the house tax, claim that they have no obligation to pay municipal taxes generally or surtaxes, their argument being that according to the spirit of the tribunal's decision their duty in the matter of taxes is limited to the exact provisions of the perpetual leases. Even though they might concede the unavoidable character of municipal taxes, they affirm that they are not required to pay the surtax on the income tax and the result is that there are many defaulters. In Tokyo, when the time came for collecting the taxes for 1906, it was proposed to put the laws in force against the defaulters, but when the Foreign Office was consulted, it replied that although some steps would be taken, there would be much inconvenience in having another dispute which called for arbitration, and it was therefore desirable that action should be limited to pressing for payment. The officials concerned are much perplexed how to act." Here, again, is what the Nichi Nichi Shimbun says:—"That the foreigners in Yokohama are making a great many complaints at present about municipal government and that they have threatened to take very decisive steps if their demands be neglected, has already been related in these columns. The municipal authorities believing this to be due to misunderstanding as to the present order of procedure in the case of public works of the locality, have offered the following explanations:—First, that whereas only one main has hitherto existed for conveying water, there will hereafter be two or more, so as to obviate all risk of inconvenience; secondly, that whereas sewage operations have been suspended in connection with a question of machinery, new plant is expected to arrive shortly from England whereupon the work will be resumed on a large scale; and thirdly, that the business of repairing the streets will be gradually taken in hand again. The foreign residents seem to have been thus brought to understand for the first time the real circumstances, and to be now entertaining friendly wishes for the successful completion of the municipality's undertakings." We trust that the Nichi Nichi Shimbun is rightly informed as the sentiment of the community.

THE BUDGET FOR 1907-8.

There are two things which may be described as perennial characteristics of spring and early summer in Japan and they are, complaints about injury to sericulture from the effects of frost, and apprehensions that the budget for next year will be found incapable of being balanced. June is the month that finds the various Departments of State busy compiling their estimates of expenditure for the ensuing year, and the newspapers, which manage to obtain access to the figures, never fail to find them very formidable. Thus one of our Tokyo contemporaries now alleges that the total on the side of outlays in the budget for 1907-8 will exceed the total on the side of incomes by over 100 million yen, and asks with evident consternation, how the discrepancy is to be rectified. Another journal (the Chuo), however, justly recalls that it is so invari-bly, and that the explanation is not far to seek, being in fact that the figures which display such a state of affairs represent nothing more than the sums which the Departments would like to have appropriated to their uses, but which never are appropriated. It is the habit of Japanese offices to set down without reserve or hesitation a full statement of the projects they wish to take in hand and the expenditures that would be involved; and it is equally the habit of the Finance Minister, on receipt of these requisitions, to draw his pen through items which transgress the limits of the Treasury's available resources, or to call upon the departmental compilers of the figures to make such retrenchments and reductions as shall produce equilibrium between incomes and outgoings. Evidently, therefore, these first-draft proposals can not for a moment be supposed to represent a final state of affairs. Experience, indeed, has taught us that when the Departments present large applications for money, they act in accordance with anticipation that considerable funds are likely to be available. Possibly in the present case the settled accounts for last year show a substantial surplus, and possibly the accounts for the current year also are expected to show a surplus. That would fully account for wide-mouthed applications from the various offices. We do not intend to suggest that the Departments regulate their demands simply with reference to the sums they think procurable. What we mean is that almost every office sees useful ways of spending money on improvements or on profitable enterprises and consequently each makes a bid for any sums which are likely to be in the coffers of the Treasury.

JAPAN AND RUSSIA.

In Public Opinion we find a translation of General Baschenow's recent memorial as reproduced by the Berlin Lokal Anzeiger, which journal is disposed to endorse it, "especially as General Baschenow prophesied with great accuracy the course of the late war." The most important passages of the memorial seem to be these:—

"The second war between Japan and Russia can not be postponed for more than six years, the islanders being unlikely to wait till 1925, when Russia will have gathered a new army. Japan will utilize to the utmost Great Britain's obligations toward her to force Russia's hand, her aim being to destroy Muscovite influence in the basin of the Pacific and to strengthen the position she has acquired in Korea and Manchuria. The peace of Portsmouth is therefore nothing but an indefinite truce at the close of which Russia will have to face two adversaries. She is bound to leave at least two-thirds of her army in the far east in order to assure what footing remains to her there.

"There remains one clear duty for Russia to perform, namely, to fortify herself in the far east against all contingencies, and notwithstanding the protest of the Japanese. A strong fleet with Vladivostok as its base is an absolute necessity. Orders should be placed at once with shipbuilders all over the world and premiums offered for delivery before contract date, in order that we may be in possession of a naval arm as soon as possible. A second line is indispensable on the trans-Siberian railway as far as Vladivostok, as well as on the Ussuri route, while Kamtschatka should be kept in telegraphic touch with the mainland. The second Japanese war is not far away behind the mountains; it is already upon our shoulders, and if we be not prepared this time, the enemy will drive us over the Baikals."

Without the whole memorial before us it is scarcely fair to criticise its author, but so far as these quoted passages go, the obvious comment is that General Baschenow attributes the warlike initiative entirely to Japan. His idea is that Japan, having set out along the route of conquest, will deliberately essay to complete what she has commenced, and with the object of totally destroying Muscovite influence in the basin of the Pacific, will force another war upon the northern Power before the year 1912. Apparently General Baschenow, when writing this memorial, did not bear fully in mind the efforts made by Japan in 1903 to avoid war. Has he considered what the position would now be if St. Petersburg had closed with Japan's final proposals? Russia would be seated permanently at Port Arthur and would hold the whole of Manchuria in the hollow of her hand. In Korea alone her position would be nominally inferior to Japan's—nominally but not really, for Russia in full possession of all her old military prestige and in full possession of all Manchuria would have utterly eclipsed Japan at the Korean court. Yet Japan was willing to accept that position rather than draw the sword, and if she had not drawn it in 1904, could she ever have drawn it with any reasonable prospect of success? Why then should he suppose her incapable of resting content with the incomparably superior position she now occupies, and why, if the tenure of so little seemed preferable to war in 1903, must the tenure of so much find her in 1906 anxious for war? We do not believe that she has changed so radically, and our firm conviction is that if war takes place as General Baschenow predicts, the responsibility of forcing it on will rest solely with Russia. Of course if she adopts the programme laid down by this officer, there will be no possibility of mistaking her intention. It will then be she that seeks revenge and recuperation, not Japan that longs for further conquests.

FOREIGN ENTERPRISES IN JAPAN.

Attention is being directed by Japanese journals to foreign enterprises in this country. The Chuo tabulates the principal. First there is the big factory for the manufacture of explosives now in process of construction at Hiratsuka, where the projectors have acquired an area of 38 acres. Our contemporary attributes the inception of this enterprise to Lord Armstrong and Company, and credits them with an intention of spending 48 million yen on the works. Next there is a big celluloid company consisting mainly of Scotchmen. The natural place for this would be Formosa, where the camphor is produced, but owing to the want of a good supply of water in that island, it is expected that Yokohama, Kobe or Osaka will be chosen as the site. Formosa produces 6 million cattie of camphor yearly and the celluloid company expect to use 800 000 cattie of that amount. Perhaps it may not be amiss to explain that celluloid's principal ingredients are gun cotton and camphor, and that it is used in the manufacture of combs, brushes, collars, cuffs, etc. The third enterprise mentioned is a plate-glass factory projected by Belgian manufacturers. Reference has already been made to this affair in our own columns. One of the difficulties in its path is that the Orient is not a large consumer of glass, and that a considerable part of its demand has hitherto been satisfied by means of the imported products of Belgium, which the manufacturers of that country can afford to sell at very low prices rather than to take the alternative of throwing them again into the furnace. But if the Belgian manufacturers are themselves interested in this venture they must be assumed to have given full thought to all such objections. These are the only three enterprises mentioned by the Chuo, but the list is obviously incomplete.

MARQUIS SAIONJI AND THE "SEIYU-KAI."

On the evening of the 22nd inst. Marquis Saionji, in his capacity of leader of the Seiyu-kai, invited the principal members of the Party to dinner and made an interesting speech. His Excellency set out by explaining the obstacles that had hitherto prevented him from meeting the prominent men of the Party after the prorogation of the Diet. He had been busy with a multitude of problems pouring in from all the Departments of State and in addition his own journey to Manchuria had occupied over a month. With reference to this journey he took the opportunity of saying that whereas the fact of his going incognito had suggested various conjectures, the simple truth was that he had done so as a matter of convenience. Had he made the expedition in his capacity of Prime Minister it would have been necessary to appoint a locum tenens during his absence from the capital, and all his doings en route as well as his interviews with persons from whom he desired to obtain information would have been hampered by formalities. The privacy chosen had for object nothing beyond convenience and facility. Since his return he had been visited by members of the Party who tendered various advice. Some desired that he should declare his policy towards the next Diet. Others suggested that steps ought to be taken for increasing the Party. But he himself had not yet given much thought to matters of party politics. He found himself too fully occupied with the undertakings consequent upon a war in which the country's existence had been at stake, and with financial problems. These engrossed his immediate attention to the exclusion of other things. But he took the opportunity of referring to one suggestion which had been made; namely, that the Rules for the Appointment of Civil Officials should be altered so as to allow of the employment of men who had not passed the prescribed examinations or followed the normal routine. He was radically opposed to anything of the kind. So soon as party politicians began to take personal rewards for object, the decadence of the party to which they belonged became an assured fact. Speaking of the post-bellum undertakings, he said that they were receiving the fullest attention and that their importance was thoroughly recognised. He was not yet in a position, however, to make any statement of a practical programme. What he could say, was that the Government intended to proceed boldly and resolutely with these measures, and that pessimistic views were quite out of place.

X INCREASE OF TECHNICAL EDUCATION.

It appears that the Emperor sent a sum of 1,000 yen by way of contribution towards the expense of Mr. Yano Jiro's funeral. This act the Kokumin Shimbun interprets as an evidence of his Majesty's desire to encourage technical education in Japan. The post-bellum undertakings, says our contemporary, wait upon the progress and development of technical education. Germany by encouraging practical education after the war of 1870 reached her present degree of prosperity; America, as a result of encouraging it, has succeeded in sometimes surpassing German manufactures. Of late years whatever advance industry has made is the outcome of applying the most highly developed scientific ability to technical work.

Hence it is a pressing need of the time to increase practical education and to bring the schools and the actual business of life into still closer touch. We have to compete vigorously in the arena of peaceful contest. After the war of 1894-5 Japan encouraged technical education and yearly added to the number of her technical schools. The facts show that whereas in 1900 the public and private technical schools numbered only 285 and the students did not exceed 25,000, in 1903 the corresponding figures were 1,584 and 91,000 respectively. Finally, in 1904, the figures were:—

Industrial Schools .....	30
Agricultural Schools .....	118
Apprentice Schools .....	40
Marine Products Schools .....	7
Commercial Schools .....	60
Schools of Navigation .....	7
Technical Schools Supplementary to Elementary Schools ( Jitsugyō Hoshū Gakko ) .....	1,683
Total .....	1,945

The number of students in this year was over 110,000. The comparison becomes still more remarkable if we go a step further back, for in 1895 the technical schools totalled only 109 (of which 12 were private schools), and in 1899 they totalled only 227 including 21 private schools. The most noteworthy change was the adoption of the Jitsugyō Hoshū Gakko system; which means that throughout the empire technical elementary schools were established, and that parents were given the option of sending their children there instead of to the ordinary elementary schools. The Kokumin Shimbun nevertheless thinks that in many respects the technical education system of Japan is far inferior to that of Germany or America and that the country must not rest content with what it has got.

THE REV. WALTER WESTON.

Many in Yokohama and Kobe will read with interest the following cutting from the Observer and Mid-Surrey County Chronicle of May 11, referring as it does to one of the most deservedly popular clergymen ever sent out to Japan by the Church of England:

A large congregation filled the parish church of St. Mary's, Ewell, last Friday evening, to witness and take part in the solemn service of the institution and induction of the new Vicar of Ewell, the Rev. Walter Weston, who had been for some five years in charge of Christ Church, Cops Hill, Wimbledon, and has succeeded the Rev. Reginald Coombs Hunt in the Vicarage of Ewell. The functions of introduction and institution were performed by his lordship the Bishop of Dorking, who was accompanied by the Rural Dean, the Rev. Canon Utterton, of Leatherhead. The new Vicar has had a wide experience both at home and abroad, having served for some years as head of the English Mission at Yokohama, from which he came home last year. That he has left behind him at Wimbledon many sincere friends and well-wishers, was rendered clear on Friday night, a number of his former parishioners having come over specially and spontaneously to attend the service, while Mr. Coleman Young, Mus. Bac., organist at Christ Church in that town, showed his esteem by undertaking to preside at the instrument, the local choir being augmented by members of the choir officiating at the Vicar's late parish. This was a very pleasing feature, indicating the influence which Mr. Weston had exercised over his former parishioners, and also accentuating the lasting nature of the kindly feelings subsisting between people and pastor, before the severance of the official ties that bound them together. The Curates of Ewell, the Rev. E. V. Bond, and the Rev. E. D. Southcomb, took part in the service. The form of service used was that sanctioned for the Diocese of Winchester, and towards the close the Bishop of Dorking delivered an interesting and practical address, in the course of which he enforced the duties of the congregation as to their share in the work of the Church, referring also to the necessity of supporting foreign missions, and appealing to the parishioners to extend their sympathy and support to the new Vicar. On Sunday last the Rev. W. Weston formally made his profession of faith by reading the Thirty-Nine Articles, partly at the morning service and partly at the service in the evening. There were large and reverent congregations. In the afternoon, at the children's service at the parish church, a very interesting and practical address was given to the children by the new Vicar, in whose hands, we feel confident, the parochial system of the Church will be administered with zeal, prudence, and solicitude.

TO MARIANA.

Sappho is dead.—No blue Aegean Sea,
Loved by heaven's fiery coronal of stars,
No dewy woods of Lesbos, full of flowers,
Could calm her wayward passion into rest.

Sappho is dead.—Yet Phaon has not wept, Phaon of cankered heart though godlike mien,

Burnt out of love, by Aphrodite's kiss.

Sappho is dead.—Dark waters lash in vain Against the cold death-haunted Leucan crag,
Ye can not rouse her from her soundless sleep.

Sappho is dead.—She deemed it well to die
And not to fret out youth in loveless years.
Sappho is dead.—And yet thou canst not die—

Schooled by convention to a cold restraint.

Yet there are stars and further lights for thee
Of which sweet sad-voiced Sappho never knew.

And wider seas and higher paths for thee
Of which sad sweet-voiced Sappho never dreamed. M.K.

NOTES ON CURRENT EVENTS.

King Edward has been pleased to confer the Order of the Grand Cross of the Bath on Admiral Saito, Minister of State for the Navy. The presentation was made by the British Ambassador on the 8th instant at the Embassy, where a grand banquet was given in honour of the occasion. Admiral Saito thus becomes Sir Minoru Saito.

We read in the Miyako Shimbun that a very large collection of English books has been made for presentation to Japan. The movement had its origin in representations made by Professor Takakusu, during his residence in England where he established such close relations with Professor Max Muller. The Japanese visitor explained that while the English language was receiving incomparably wider study in Japan than any other foreign tongue and while the tendency of the country was towards Anglo-Saxondom, there were few facilities for forming a clear conception of Anglo-Saxon ideals. The best way to remedy that defect would be to furnish a supply of books. The matter seems to have been very vigorously taken up. A lady who is spoken of as Miss (or Mrs.) Gordon threw herself into the work with much zeal and, the interest of The Times and the Daily Telegraph having been enlisted, books or money to purchase them began to pour in. Miss Gordon gave her own residence for the purposes of an office and Messrs. Okura and Company's London branch undertook to pack and forward the books free of charge. Our contemporary states that 54 cases containing 25,000 volumes have already reached Tokyo, and that 26 cases containing 13,000 or 14,000 are still expected. It is proposed to build a library in connexion with the School of Foreign Languages, of which Professor Takakusu is President. Our readers will observe that either the cases must be exceptionally large or the volumes extraordinarily small, for according to the numbers given above each of the 54 boxes already received must have accommodated 463 volumes.

The accounts for the island of Karafuto for the 40th fiscal year are stated to be as follow:—

EXPENDITURES.	Yen.
Investigations relating to Development.....	74,200
Local Administration .....	60,750
Sanitation and Hospitals .....	23,500
Arrangement of Localities .....	1,200
Establishment and Surveys of local communities.....	4,500
Roads, building and repairing.....	140,000
Protection and breeding of cattle.....	17,000
Forestry .....	34,280
Preservation of temporary Light-houses.....	1,200
Education .....	10,000
Posts .....	8,000
Brick kilns .....	20,000
Immigrants.....	10,000
Jails .....	6,000
Building of Hospital .....	20,000
Building of Jails.....	10,000
Building of Marine Products Experimental Station.....	38,000
Reserve .....	16,950

Total outlays ..... 495,280

REVENUE.	Yen.
Fisheries .....	320,000
Various .....	31,000
Brought over .....	144,280

In addition to the above there is an outlay of some 600,000 yen on account of the military establishment, so that the total expenditures amount to over a million yen. It should be noted that these accounts have not been passed. They are merely given as compiled.

In the Asahi Shimbun we read that the War Office authorities are busily engaged compiling regulations for the change of period of service with the colours from three years to two years. The methods adopted in France and Germany where the two-years' system is in vogue are being carefully considered. It is pretty generally known that the tendency in recent times has been to lessen the conscript's period of service with the colours. In Germany and France 3 years used to be the rule, whereas it is now 2 years, and Russia's former 4 years have been reduced to three. A prominent Russian officer recently contributed to the Invalide Russ an article proving that although nominally trained during three years, the Russian conscript does not actually receive instruction for more than 440 days. This is explained by deducting Sundays, holidays and various other occasions of exemption from military duties. The upshot of the matter is that in Germany, where the two-years' system prevails, men are actually trained for 140 days longer than in Russia under the three-years' system. The Tokyo journal says that the Japanese regulations will provide for 100 days more than the Russian methods provide, but apparently the German rules will remain the most efficient.

We read in Japanese journals that expert opinion in Japan is not very favourable to submarines. Three objections have been formed as the result of experimenting with these novel engines of warfare. The first is that their armament is weak—a somewhat vague assertion which we can not interpret accurately. The second is the radical difficulty, fully appreciated in the West also, namely, that after submersion the speed of the vessels is insufficient. And the third is that for fighting on the surface they are too susceptible to the influence of the waves. The consensus of opinion is that as weapons of offence these vessels do not promise any signal results, and that their sphere of usefulness is practically limited to defence. At present there are seven submarines in the Japanese Navy. Five of them are formed into a squadron attached to the Yokosuka port admiralty, and the remaining two are at Kure. But in spite of this unfavourable verdict the Japanese Naval Authorities intend, it is said, to build several submarines for experimental purposes.

Some time ago it was confidently stated that the programme of railway nationalization would not be carried further this year than the purchase of the Seoul-Fusan line, and there were even some onlookers who predicted that the scheme would never be consummated at all. But the Hochi Shimbun and the Yomiuri Shimbun now allege that the Government intends to take over the Tanko Railway, the Koku Railway and the Nippon Railway before the close of the year, probably before October. We can not accept this piece of news as trustworthy without confirmation.

The Military Reform Committee under the presidency of General Baron Nishi held its first meeting on the 22nd instant. The proceedings seem to have been limited to a short address from the President, who explained that the experiences gained by Japan in recent years had demonstrated the necessity of changes in various directions, and that the Committee had been appointed to consider this topic. Thereafter sub-committees were formed, and to each was entrusted a special sphere of investigation.

It has been decided, according to rumour, to build a horse-tram between Korsakoff and Vladimirofska in Saghalien. The distance is 23 miles and the cost is estimated at 400,000 yen. It is not a private project: apparently the Military Authorities will take it in hand. Were the tram laid along the coast the work would be comparatively easy and inexpensive, but it would then be exposed to destruction by storms, so the safer though more costly inland route will be chosen.

It is stated that the Tokyo Municipality contemplates entertaining Admiral Moore and the officers and seamen of the British Squadron on its arrival in Yokohama. The number of guests will be some 5,000, and it will therefore be necessary to divide them into two parties and to make a two days' affair of it. According to newspaper statements the warrant officers and men will be invited to Uyeno Park and the officers to the Maple Club.

It is stated that Mr. Inagaki having persisted in his refusal to return to Siam, his place will probably be given to Mr. Sato, and Mr. Inagaki is expected to proceed to Brussels.

Japanese journals say that the Orel (now the Iwami), which is undergoing repairs at Kure, will cost 3 million yen before she emerges from dock in a completely restored condition. To such an extent did she suffer. The Varyag (Soya) is being repaired at Yokosuka. She is a new ship with a speed of 23 knots, and she will form a sensible addition to the Japanese Navy. But the Poltava, which was launched in 1893, will never be fit to take her place in the first fighting line, her age being a fatal blemish. She will become a unit of the reserve squadron.

It is announced that the second sale of captured steamers will take place at the Naval Department in Tokyo on the 28th instant at 10 a.m. The ships are all in good order and, being comparatively valuable, will probably excite keen competition. They are the following:—

Present name.	Original name.	Displacement.	Place.
Goto Maru .....	Silviana .....	4,187	Saseho.
Isobe Maru .....	Easty Abbey .....	2,963	Yokosuka.
Nagayama Maru .....	Fuhping .....	1,393	"
Yaura Maru .....	Veteran .....	1,199	Saseho.
Anakusa Maru .....	Amour .....	2,415	"
(taken in Port Arthur.)
Shibata Maru ...	(Port Arthur cables ship)...	2,780	Yokosuka

The Kimura affair seems to be ranking in the minds of the Germans. They are said to be quite persuaded that Professor Kimura's wireless telegraphy and telephon are unblushingly pirated from Professor Rumer's inventions, and we read in the Niroku that an article recently appeared in a Berlin paper headed "Have a care of the Japanese scientific spy." The incident has disposed them to refuse all assistance to Japanese students visiting Germany. Our Tokyo contemporary says that one of its countrymen, who has just returned to Yokohama, went to Germany to investigate the method of using pigments in decorating porcelain, but the firm of Meissen in Berlin refused to have anything to say to him and he had to come away disappointed. Other Japanese visiting Germany for educational purposes are likely to suffer similarly. So at least writes the Niroku. But there is probably much exaggeration in the rumours. That in the absence of conclusive proof to the contrary the Germans should believe the statements of their own scientists in preference to those of the Japanese is perfectly natural; just as natural as that the Japanese should credit—which they do—Professor Kimura's assertion rather than Professor Rumer's. But it can not be supposed that the Germans are so emotional or so unjust as to visit on the heads of all Japanese the consequences of a fault attributed to one of them and not yet definitely proved against him. We deem it very doubtful whether Messrs. Meissen & Co.'s refusal to admit a Japanese student to their workshops had anything to do with the Kimura-Rumer incident. At all events we have no more right to assume a connexion than we have to pass judgment at this stage upon either Rumer or Kimura.

Mr. E. H. House was buried in the Awoyama cemetery in the year 1901. Since that time his Japanese admirers have been collecting a memorial fund, which has now amounted, according to Tokyo journals, to 3,500 yen. It has been decided that the interest shall be employed for the maintenance of a special lecture hall in the Imperial University, where English and music will be taught.

The public may at last look forward to considerable extensions of the telephone system. It is announced, in the first place, that there will be a reduction of charges over short-distance routes, the rates for long distances, however, remaining unaltered. This will effect the following:—

Tokyo-Yokohama, reduced from 25 sen to 20 sen .
Yokohama-Yokosuka, reduced from 25 sen to 15 sen .
Kamakura-Hayama, reduced from 20 sen to 10 sen .
Kyoto-Otsu, reduced from 20 sen to 10 sen .
Osaka-Sakai, reduced from 20 sen to 10 sen .

In the next place work will be at once commenced—or has been already commenced—on large extensions, the result of which will be to increase the number of principal stations by 130 and that of branch stations by from 400 to 500, thus bringing the number of telephones from 35,000, which is the present figure, to 100,000. It will be seen, therefore, that the service is to be more than doubled. The Diet in its last session voted a sum of 2 million yen for this purpose. That amount forms part of a total expenditure of 22 millions to be spread over 7 years including the present year. It is explained that this project would have been taken in hand sooner had not the war intervened.

Japanese newspapers state that not unnaturally foreign States are making various efforts to discover what Japan's experiences have been in the recent war as bearing upon the manufacture of arms and equipment, but the Japanese, of course, are preserving strict silence, and if they succeed in wrapping this matter in mystery as profound as that which enveloped their military and naval operations during the war, it is not likely that much information will leak out. Meanwhile there have been numerous offers to supply Japan with arms of various patterns in replacement of those worn out during the war, but all these offers have been declined. The Fiji Shimpō states that the Japanese authorities, sensible of the advisability of keeping together in a constantly efficient condition their staff of skilled artisans, are making arrangements not to reduce the number employed, as would be natural after the war, and that, in order to lessen the expense of maintaining the establishment, orders will be taken from Eastern countries for arms and equipment.

The remarks attributed to General Rennenkampf at a military banquet in St. Petersburg when on the eve of setting out to take command of the Third Army Division in Siberia, remarks which are reported to have elicited loud applause from the audience, naturally provoke some comment in Japan. This General is not the only prominent Russian officer who has declared a war of revenge to be imminent. In our issue of the 26th instant we reproduced from the Lokal Anzeiger certain passages of similar import which occurred in a memorial presented to the Throne by General Baschenow. Commenting on these utterances the Fiji Shimpō says that they do not consist with what Japan knows as Bushido. The Bushū while the fight lasted, put forth his full strength to destroy his enemy. But so soon as his sword was sheathed he struck hands with his sometime foe and became his genuine friend. It is possible that these alarmist assertions by Russian Generals may be chiefly intended to divert the nation's attention from its domestic embarrassments, but to sacrifice good relations with a foreign Power merely on the chance of slightly alleviating troubles at home is a poor policy. The Chuo Shimbun treats the matter in a somewhat different spirit. It says, indeed, that Japan is ready either to clasp hands of friendship with Russia or to give her her revenge if she is determined to have it. But that such proclamations should be made to the world by Russian Generals within a twelve-month of the signature of a peace treaty and at a moment when the Russian empire is torn by domestic disturbances, must be described either as an empty threat or an act of lunacy.

BOOKSHELF.

"The Naval Pocket Book."

WE have to hand a copy of the eleventh annual issue of the little work which Sir W. Laird Clowes founded and which is now being carried on by his son, Mr. Geoffrey S. Laird Clowes. The last edition was corrected to March 31st, with addenda to June 9th, 1905, and the accomplished editor died on August 14th (a little over two months after the latter date) from the illness to which he referred in the preface to that volume. The present publication is corrected to March 20th last with addenda to April 20th. Among the events chronicled as having taken place during printing is the raising of the battleship Mikasa in Saseho harbour. The report on which this statement is no doubt based was one of the many canards that have found their way abroad during and since the war. The Mikasa is still embedded in the mud at Saseho. The comparative summary of fighting fleets shows that Great Britain has five six more first-class battleships than the strongest combination against her (which would be the United States and Germany); six fewer second-class battleships than France and Germany combined; 19 fewer third class battleships than France and Germany; five more first class armoured cruisers than the United States and France; six fewer second class armoured cruisers than Japan and France; and four fewer armoured cruisers of other sorts than Russia and France. These numbers constitute what may be called the fighting line. It is not necessary to give details as to the other sections of the respective navies but it may be mentioned that among cruisers Great Britain (similarly taking into account the strongest combination) is plus four first class protected cruisers, and four third class cruisers (scouts), being minus two partially protected, 19 third class protected (under 3,000 tons), and 15 smaller partially protected or unprotected cruisers. Summarising these figures, the result is considerably different. In ships of the line France and Germany easily present the strongest combination (respectively 61 and 45=106) as against Britain's 107 vessels, giving her an excess of only one. Of cruisers France and Germany again have the preponderance (respectively 36 and 37=73) but Britain's superiority is 30. In coast defence ships, where the strongest possible combination against her are the United States and France (11 and 8=19) she is minus 14, and in respect of her torpedo flotilla she has 488 craft fewer. In the lists of ships, the navies of Brazil, Holland, Japan and Russia in particular have been revised in considerable detail, and about twenty new plans of ships have been added or substituted for those which have become out of date. The Pocket Book (which, it is to be noted, increases annually in size) will be found highly interesting by all who give thought to comparative naval strength.

"The Jewel in the Lotus"; by S. E. BRADY.

Published by the Oriental Press, Shanghai: Yokohama, Messrs. Kelly & Walsh.

THERE are six stories in this book and each of them is a veritable gem. We had not previously heard of Mr. S. E. Brady nor is there on the title-page of the work now before us anything to suggest earlier authorship. "The Jewel in the Lotus" would seem to be his maiden effort, and if that be so we conclude that he will have the rare good fortune to leap at once into the full blaze of fame. Much of his dramatization is equal to the best that Rudyard Kipling ever did. He is indeed very like Rudyard Kipling, and were there any evidence of the smallness of imitation in his work we should be tempted to find here a case of a neophyte modelling himself on a celebrity. But how can we speak of copying where the copyist rises fully to the master's level? The tales are startlingly powerful and at once so realistic and so novel that they hold the reader spell-bound. Still we carry away from perusal of the volume a sentiment of pain and protest. Four out of the six stories deal with Oriental topics, and in every one of them the Oriental is shockingly depicted. Pao, the Thibetan, T'uk-mar, his love, Mei Tai-tai, the Peking carter, Chou and Liu, Fu Hsing, his wife and his son—one and all are stupendously wicked. Crime of the blackest kind presents no repulsive feature to them. The Lama of P'ug-nak is the one example of fair white morality that confronts us throughout the course of these four thrilling narratives. We are forced to conclude that Mr. Brady is a disciple of the creed of East is East and West is West, and that moreover he has conceived the blackest possible estimate of Oriental character. Yet it must be confessed that all his recitals deal with folks of more or less shocking type whether Oriental or Occidental. Perhaps the power of his imagination forces him to paint in lurid colours only. Whatever be the explanation it is certain that he espouses and will strongly help to propagate the exclusive creed of Rudyard Kipling. In another important respect the two writers greatly resemble one another: each peoples the unknown with mysteries and moulds them into wonderfully realistic shapes. Each deduces a wholly new range of noumena from small differences of phenomena, and each has an equally fine faculty of projecting these novel conceptions on his pages in vividest colours. "The Jewel in the Lotus" contains many evidences of its author's acquaintance with China and the Chinese. He seems likely therefore to do for the Middle Kingdom what Kipling has done for India. We shall not attempt to analyse the stories or in any way to mar the keen interest they will give to our readers. One question only we desire to propound. It is, how could such an one as Pao, the Thibetan, sing in the sunset to his bride such a song as that of the coral tree and the golden heart, and how could such music be appreciated by such an one as the "filthy little T'uk-mar?"

No 12 of Awaremi (Mercy) which may be taken as the organ of the Japanese Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals, is to hand. It is printed in Japanese with the exception of one page in English in which there are brief notes of the work undertaken by the society. Incidentally this monthly journal pays a warm tribute to noble efforts of Mrs. Marshall Martin and of those whose interest she has been successful in enlisting with regard to this humane cause. A Japanese Children's Society having the same objects has been holding meetings in the Central Tabernacle at Hongo, the latest of which, on May 27th was attended by 1,000 children.

Two illustrated articles appear in Cherry Blossoms for June, one descriptive of Karatsu the well-known coal port, the features and scenic surroundings of which are very well depicted; and the other dealing with the old Dutch settlement at Deshima and reproducing a photograph of the International Club at Nagasaki which stands almost on the site of the old Dutch factory.

MR. H. YUASA.

According to the Official Gazette, Mr. H. Yuasa, the courteous Superintendent of the Yokohama Harbour Police Office, has been appointed chief police inspector under the Chemulpo Residency. In 1885, he joined the Kaga-cho Police Office, which was then called the Settlement Police Station, as a student-interpreter. After five years he was promoted to police-inspector. When the Harbour Police Office was established, he was removed to the new station as its chief. In 1900, he was promoted to senior police inspector and raised to the rank of sonin. During his connexion with the Harbour Station, his administration commended itself strongly to foreigners as well as Japanese. He has decorations from Russia, China and Korea. He will leave Yokohama at the beginning of July for his new post. Mr. Y. Okada, formerly chief of the Bluff Station, succeeds him.

MR. RUTHERFOORD HARRIS AND MR. ROBERT YOUNG.

IN the correspondence columns of The Tribune a controversy has taken place between Dr. RUTHERFOORD HARRIS and Mr. ROBERT YOUNG, proprietor and editor of the Kobe Chronicle, who appears to be now in England, or at any rate who was there until the close of April. The point at issue between them is whether Japan's programme of paying off her foreign debt in thirty-three years is likely to be realized. Dr. HARRIS thinks yes, Mr. YOUNG, as might have been predicted, thinks not. In our opinion neither disputant can be pronounced entirely in the wrong. It is a matter of faith. Japanese financiers have mapped out and obtained the Diet's consent to a scheme which pledges the Treasury to put away every year a sum of 110 million yen for the service of the debt. Mr. YOUNG declares that such a project can not be adhered to because Japan's growing expenditures will absorb this surplus in whole or in part; Dr. HARRIS, on the contrary, credits Japan with ability and resolution to keep up the system until the end. For our own part, we should greatly hesitate to endorse either forecast. In answer to Mr. YOUNG it may fairly be argued that 110 million yen does not absorb the whole of the war-taxes, but that there remains a sum of 40 or 50 million yen which should suffice to meet any new demands on the Treasury arising out of the Empire's development. Consequently, even while making this great annual allotment on account of interest and sinking fund, a margin to cover the State's growing expenditures should be available. On the other hand, in reply to Dr. HARRIS it might be contended that many Japanese publicists query the probability of adhering to this heroic method of amortization, and think that in the face of pressing demands for money to carry out attractive enterprises, the Diet will revoke its action of last session. Certainly the latter hypothesis would be much more consistent with experience than the former had the Japanese Diet ever previously consented to revoke a measure approved by both Houses, and especially a measure affecting the Empire's financial credit. Nevertheless Mr. YOUNG is entitled to make predictions if he feels disposed to engage in that perilous pastime. But he is not entitled to misinterpret events or to give to mere rumours the status of established facts. He is guilty of the former when he alleges, with regard to the arrangement for defraying the foreign loan, that "the Finance Minister defended the Bill not so much as being a measure of redemption as one for the consolidation of debt." In so far as this is intended to convey the impression that Mr. SAKATANI assigned to the measure a character of political expediency rather than one of sound finance, it is quite misleading. Mr. SAKATANI did not say anything of the kind. What he said was that the Treasury did not pledge itself to apply in a fixed and invariable manner the surplus remaining every year out of the sum of 110 million yen appropriated for the service of the debt. This surplus would certainly be used to reduce the country's debts, but the Treasury would use its own discretion as to the special channel of liquidation into which the money should be directed. That is very different indeed from calling the measure one of consolidation rather than one of redemption. As to Mr. YOUNG's manipulation of rumours, an example is furnished in the following statement:—"The genesis of the Loan Redemption Law is to be found in a somewhat rash promise made by Mr. TAKAHASHI, the Japanese Financial Commissioner, when in London last year with a view to loan flotation. Mr. TAKAHASHI pledged himself that the Government intended to make an arrangement for the redemption of all loans within the next thirty years by the provision of a sinking fund of 110,000,000 yen per annum." Mr. ROBERT YOUNG has no authority for this statement other than that of Japanese journals, and he certainly ought to have learned that the organs of political parties are not always an infallible source of intelligence. He takes it upon himself, however, to declare explicitly that this promise was made, and moreover so little careful is he of accuracy that he makes Mr. TAKAHASHI speak of the whole 110 millions as a "sinking fund," which is obviously extravagant. There need not be much doubt that Mr. TAKAHASHI did undertake that due provision should be made for the service of the debt, but as to the nature of the engagement he offered, the general public is quite uninformed and Mr. ROBERT YOUNG, who ventures to be so explicit, has no better qualification to be the mouth-piece of official doings than has any other unit of the general public. It may not have occurred to him, perhaps, that he lays a charge of gross ill-faith at the door of Japanese financiers, for he represents Mr. TAKAHASHI as making in London promises which Mr. SAKATANI virtually repudiates in the House of Representatives. Mr. YOUNG, when he penned these assertions, may not have recognised the full significance of what is implied by them, but that excuse, if it be admitted, is fatal to his competence as a publicist, for it is essential that a newspaper correspondent should at least realize the import of his own allegations.

MONTHLY SUMMARY OF THE JAPANESE RELIGIOUS PRESS.

In compiling these Summaries it has always been our object to state the opinions of all earnest thinkers on religion. We are not conscious of neglecting to reproduce the writings of any existing school of thought. The Waseda Bungaku, on its re-publication a few months ago, took the trouble to send members of its staff to the houses of certain well-known religious teachers to consult with them as to the present religious situation in Japan, and it has since published the views of the men interviewed. We have already furnished epitomes of the opinions of seven Japanese scholars on the present state of religious feeling in Japan and we now proceed to deal with the views of Doctors Anezaki and Motora, as given by the Waseda Bungaku.

(8) Dr. Anezaki.—It would seem as though one of the results of the war was the creation of a new kind of self-consciousness in the nation. The recently reported new religious activity indicates that at the bottom of their hearts people are dissatisfied with themselves and their ideals and are feeling about for something higher and nobler. Great mental activity after big wars is no uncommon occurrence, as the history of various nations has shown. As for the authority claimed for personal experiences, society as a whole will naturally not respond to any such claim. The men who tell us they have had these experiences must bear in mind that holy men in all ages have had similar experiences. Mr. Ebina tells us that religion must be made ethical; which means that it must be capable of accomplishing something practical in society. But it seems to me that the highest part of religion is its theocratic part. And in the history of Christianity its theocracy has occupied a more fundamental position than its ethics. The great literary men of the west have nearly all made theocracy the basis of their systems of thought. The reason of this is that both ethical inquiry and philosophic inquiry naturally lead up to religion, and so it happens that a man's ethical belief ultimately depends on his religious belief. To me it seems that religion is in all cases the real basis of ethics. You ask me whether I think that this emotional religion of Tsunajima and others will give place to the intellectual form of faith founded by the late Mr. Kiyozawa. To a certain extent the two forms will blend. But there are certain incompatible elements in the two forms—the religion of the intellect and the religion of the emotions. The late Mr. Kiyozawa studied the teaching of Epictetus with great admiration and he was to all intents and purposes a Stoic. Mr. Sawayanagi Masatarō and other prominent men are advocates of this form of religion; which is known here as akirame no shūkyō (religion that is understood clearly). That this form of religious conviction can exist in conjunction with the most deadly enmity to ordinary religious belief is shown by the action of Marcus Aurelius who, despite his sincere belief in Stoicism, persecuted the Christians of his time so cruelly. But the general tendency is towards harmonizing the religion of the heart and the religion of the intellect. This was distinctly shown by the teaching of Christ, Shaka and Luther. In the Buddhist world here the teaching of Kiyozawa and the teaching of Chikazumi will gradually be harmonized. In reference to Mr. Ebina's assertion that Japanese Christianity will be influenced by Buddhist pantheism, it is my belief that the two religions will borrow much from each other. The new Buddhist movement that goes by the name of Muga no ai (Unselfish Love) originated with Tolstoi, and Tolstoi's religion has received much inspiration from Buddhism.

(9) Dr. Motora.—As for these alleged visions or revelations, as far as the persons who affirm that they have been the subjects of them, are concerned, there is no need to criticize them or question them. Personal experiences of this kind are not to be pronounced impossible nor can they be tested by our own different experience. Nobody has any right to demand a rational explanation of such things nor can anybody pronounce them to be impossible or prove that they were mere hallucinations. Mr. Tsunajima is a man of education. He is moreover well aware of the dangers of superstition. Yet he believes in the reality of his own visions. This is of course purely emotional religion and purely subjective in nature. But when we come to discuss the use that uneducated people are likely to make of Mr. Tsunajima's visions, here it seems to us there is serious risk of their doing harm. Teachers of religion need to exercise great caution in the use they make of such alleged revelations. You ask me whether I think that anybody who desires it may become the subject of similar intercourse with God, and whether such revelations are purely accidental or preceded by certain fixed conditions. I realize that to some people these experiences seem incomprehensible. The mental experiences of adherents of the Shin

Sect of Buddhists and of Christians are entirely different from what is known as satori (enlightenment, awakening) among the Zen Sect of Buddhists. According to the teaching of this sect the process of enlightenment is a gradual process. There is first the 小悟, shōgo, or minor awakening. Then follows the 大悟, daigo or great awakening. After this great awakening has been going on some time the state of thorough enlightenment 徹底, teitai, lit. getting at the bottom of things) is reached. Mr. Tsunajima's visions can be described in no such language. They were only somewhat sudden impressive experiences which remained vividly in his memory long after they had ceased. In one sense the experiences were accidental, but they were the result of a certain culture of mind which their subject had undergone. Hence for people who have in no way prepared themselves for such experiences to suppose that they can at will become subject to them is of course quite absurd. It is a psychological law that most of the so-called inspirations of or revelations to mankind follow sustained thought on special subjects. Ordinary people fail to understand how this comes about. When Socrates told the Greeks of Athens that he had visions they sneered at him. But this was his way of describing the working of his intuitive genius. . . . In reference to the connection of religion and ethics, to me religion, in that it includes all that is true, all that is good and all that is beautiful, is more comprehensive than ethics. Religion occupies the innermost recesses of man's heart, permeates the springs of all his actions, and the highest forms of sincerity and love of truth come from it. You ask what I think will be the future of existing religions. They will become more and more seasoned with the salt of common-sense. To help the distressed and scatter seeds of kindness everywhere will be the chief functions of all existing religions, and pity, love, mercy, will be their chief watchwords. As for the amalgamation of existing religions and the construction of one comprehensive faith, it is not likely to occur, though cordiality among the various sects is undoubtedly on the increase.

Mr. Saji Jitsunen, writing in the Rikugō Zasshi, points out that the abolition of sects to-day ought to be greatly facilitated by the fact that the circumstances which called them into existence and which in nearly all instances suggested the names they now bear have all altered. Such titles as Unitarians and Universalists no longer have any significance. The views of Christians have undergone great modification since the days that Channing found it necessary to protest against Trinitarian doctrines. In the case of many sects their doctrinal raison d'être no longer exists. This applies to Buddhism as much as to Christianity. There is nothing of sufficient importance in the doctrines of the various Buddhist sects to prevent their worshipping together and co-operating in benevolent and religious work. The same may be said of a large number of Protestant sects. Religious propagandism, argues Mr. Saji, would go ahead at a rapid pace if Christian and Buddhist sects were to combine each other's efforts, even if it is too much to expect that Buddhists and Christians should work together. In another article published in the Rikugō Zasshi Mr. Saji discusses at some length the different theories held in reference to the function of religion and its raison d'être. The various uses to which religion is put by states and by communities do not account for its existence and the hold it has on the human mind, says Mr. Saji. This he traces to certain individual aspirations which find in religion more satisfaction than in anything else. Writing in the Rikugō Zasshi on "The Interest of Life," Mr. Seki Hidesaburō says that work carefully done day after day constitutes the chief interest of life. He thinks that there is no satisfaction in life to be compared to the performance of duty.

Mr. Kuroiwa Shūroku, in a very interesting, philosophical article published in the Rikugō Zasshi, traces the connection between conduct and character. He discusses at some length the question of the bearing of education and general training on character. He thinks that a good deal of blundering goes on all over the world in the training to which the young are subjected. Qualities are suppressed that should be carefully preserved and strengthened. With the idea of improving on nature we frequently spoil it. In character as in the material world the artificial very rarely reaches the standard of the natural. Mr. Kuroiwa is in favour of preserving individual peculiarities of character as far as possible and of allowing each man to follow the bent of his own mind. Society is immensely benefited by the production of as great a variety of types of character as possible. Thus it is true to say that the highest form of egoism, the full development of the powers of each individual by himself or herself, proves in the end to be essentially altruistic, as from it society receives endless benefits. There is a charm, says Mr. Kuroiwa, about the unvarnished original nature of every man (tenshin-ranman); there is a charm about the special tastes which follow the bent of each separate mind; and there is a charm even about the way in which men discover in their fellow-men tendencies, opinions, tastes and habits with which they have no sympathy and on which their very natures prompt them to wage war all their days. In the maintenance of the strong individuality of various types of men lies the secret of the world's progress and also the chief interest of the history of mankind. This subject, Mr. Kuroiwa remarks, though very old is ever new, and in this extremely conventional age cannot be too much pressed on the attention of thoughtful people.

We furnish a few more extracts from the Raise no Umi, our object being to let each school of thought have its say and perhaps to furnish material for the compilation of a pamphlet on a subject second to none in interest in the opinion of many readers of these Summaries.

(25) Dr. Murakami Sensei.—Whether it is a fact that a hell or a heaven awaits us human beings hereafter, whether it is a fact that with animals and human beings transmigration takes place and they begin a second life—whether there actually exists such a thing as metempsychosis—are questions it is not easy to answer. Regarded from one point of view, Buddhism affirms transmigration, but regarded from another point of view it denies it altogether. (Bukkyō no gotoki mo,ippō yori mireba yū-rine-setsu de aru ga, sara ni ta hōnen yori kōsatsu sureba, mataku mu-rine-setsu de aru.) To the thoroughly enlightened there is no transmigration. It is only the deluded that think it exists. So as a real truth it has no existence. It is merely a mental delusion (Gōjin meijō 迷情 no ue ni koso are; shinri no ue ni wa nai koto to narite-aru.) The idea of transmigration and transmigration suggested itself quite naturally to the human mind as a result of certain feelings we experience in life. When I write thus, I expect to be asked, what about your own personal belief? To this I can only reply that I am an agnostic. Nothing can be known on this question, and it seems to me that rather than spend time in uselessly investigating a subject on which nothing can be found out each one of us had better fulfil his own destiny in the world. However much men in ancient and modern times may have inquired into this subject, they have never obtained any satisfactory definite information. Some think a future life exists, some think it does not. So the matter must be left open. In such matters we must trust nature, or Buddha, if you wish it put so. The fuss made over (sawagi-tatsuru) the terrors of hell and praying to Buddha in order to enter paradise, under the assumption that there is certainly a future life, is, in my opinion, a species of delusion.

(26) Dr. Nanjō Bunyū.—Since I have no experience of the future life to go on, I simply accept what was taught me in childhood bearing on the law of cause and effect that operates in the three worlds, the past, the present and the future. I endeavour to fulfil my destiny here and look forward to reaching a higher state of existence, when I hope to benefit the inhabitants of this earth.*

*This is no more than a free paraphrase of the extremely technical Buddhist terms employed by Dr. Nanjō. He evidently does not go beyond ac-

(27) Dr. Anezaki.—I have nothing new to add to what the wise and holy men of antiquity wrote on this subject. It would be interesting to know what is the attitude of the general public to their teaching.

(28) Mr. Yamaji Aizan.—To me death is sleep and life is wakefulness. The present life comes from a forgotten past life. I think that there will be a new awakening in another world. It amounts to this that we are each of us organs of Nature, to be used for its own purposes, and pass on from life to death and death to life endlessly. This is my belief.

(29) Dr. Takagi Jintarō.—I believe in the future life, for the following reasons. (1) Each one of us finds himself endowed with intellectual and moral faculties that are not satisfied in this world. Their cravings are unlimited. Before our powers are fully developed we die. Now granting that there is a God and that the world is governed in a rational manner (both of which I believe), it is hard to understand the system of the universe at all unless one supposes that the disproportion between the things we crave for and the things we possess will be righted in a future state. (2) People do not receive in this world an adequate reward for their actions. Not only are they not rewarded, but in some cases, strange to say, people suffer because they are upright and good. If there is no future world where this disagreement between conduct and its reward is adjusted, the scheme of the universe is inexplicable. This expectation of rewards and punishments on our part does not proceed from mere self-interest, but because we believe that the universe is governed perpetually on principles of equity that imply the reward of good and the punishment of evil. (3) The religion which I believe (Christianity) teaches plainly that there is a future world. As to this I have no doubt whatever. In reference to the nature of the future life in which we Christians believe, (1) It is not the immortality of the work we accomplish in this life nor that immortality which we obtain through posterity in which we believe; (2) nor is it the future existence that consists of absorption into the general substance of the universe; (3) but individual eternal life. This state will not be one of perpetual inactivity and unprogressiveness, but one of continual growth and development.

The following comments on the mental distress occasionally ending in suicide, which again seems to prevail to an unusual extent, appear in the To-Asia no Hikari. Dr. Inoue Tetsujirō, the editor of the Magazine, says in substance:—People talk very glibly about their ability to cure this evil. They say that nothing is needed but the application of their religious nostrums to it, failing to realize that the state of despair into which certain young men drift is the result of very complicated causes and not one that lends itself to treatment by the ordinary religious teacher, Buddhist or Christian. There are many self-styled prophets who offer their services on such occasions and who seem to think that the young men in question have only to accept without question their doctrines in order to become normal members of society. But the careful investigator of the causes of the phenomenon under discussion soon discovers that the pessimism from which so many young men are suffering to-day has its origin in a variety of untoward circumstances amid which young men pass weary years. (1) There is the difficulty of earning a living, a difficulty which as regards very young men seems to have increased since the war ended. (2) Then there are many disappointments in school life that seem hard to bear. The facilities for receiving a high education in this country are quite inadequate when the number of earnest applicants for admission to the High Schools and the Universities are considered. (3) The sensational novels read by young men are permeated with unwholesome pessimism and fail to supply healthy stimuli to effort and perseverance. (4) There is with us as a people a habit of introspection which helps to intensify mental distress. Young men in this country are apt to brood over their troubles until life becomes unbearable. Dr. Inouye discusses at some length the alleged visions and revelations and the new religious activity connected therewith, and comes to the conclusion that developments of this kind will do little to help young men out of the slough of despair into which they have unhappily sunk. He thinks that the creation of new surroundings for these young men, the importation of healthy, common-sense ideas, and above all the creation of spheres of activity are the only effective remedies for their mental depression.

cepting the teaching of the sect to which he belongs, the course followed by the majority of Christians and Buddhists.—(WRITER OF SUMMARY.)

We extract the following short notes from the Seikyō Shimpō (Greek Church organ). It is reported in the newspapers that Gorky is coming to Japan. We have been asked whether our church will unite with the general literary public in welcoming the great novelist. We certainly can not do so. His novels are not only subversive of Christian supernaturalism, but also of Christian ethics. We have nothing in common with him and as a church we can extend to him no kind of welcome, whatever may be the action of individual Greek Church Christians.

It is reported in the newspapers that the trial of Noguchi has been attended by a number of school girls. It seems to us deplorable that the gruesome and disgusting details which the trial brought to light should be listened to by young girls out of a love of sensation. An ancient sage says, "Nothing evil should reach our ears," but it would seem that the modern training of girls is based on the principle of letting them hear everything good and bad.

Dr. Inoue Tetsujirō is still confident that a new religion can be manufactured to order. Shaka and Mahomet founded philosophical systems, but not new religions. Though Mahometanism and Buddhism bear the name of religions, they give no new theology to the world. Modern scholars may found a new school of philosophy, but they can go no further.

It seems to us that one of the results of our imbibing Western ideas on individual rights, political rights, and the like, is a certain amount of family discord that was unknown in Japan in pre-Meiji days. Self-assertion is in many instances carried too far and children no longer respect their parents as they used to. Some young women's heads have been filled with the notion that a man and his wife have equal rights in everything. Even friendship is marred now and again by the resentment resulting from a supposed infringement of rights on the one side or the other. But as Christians we are not warranted in setting up our individual authority against that wielded by our seniors, parents and guardians. A man is declared to be the head of his own house and no such thing as equal authority and equal rights is possible in a purely Christian household. Though among worldly people the adoption of extreme notions on the question of rights is common we Christians ought to follow the teaching of the New Testament on this subject. According to this the reserve, modesty, gentleness and quiet submissiveness of our women in past ages are qualities worth keeping. It would be foolish to exchange them for the strife-producing self-assertiveness and disputatiousness so frequently found in certain Western countries.

Writing on the proposed amalgamation of Christianity and Buddhism the Seikyō Shimpō says the thing is quite impossible. The two creeds are as different as fire and water in the conception of the writer. Christianity is not a philosophy, but its theology has a philosophical basis. Buddhism is not a religion but a philosophy, but it has mixed many distinctly religious elements with its philosophy. The philosophy that forms the basis of the Christian theology and the philosophy that forms the basis of Buddhism are in fundamental principles diametrically opposed to each other. If in trigonometry two straight lines running in opposite directions can never meet, neither can these two systems of thought ever meet.

Commenting on the proposed union of religious sects, the Seikyō Shimpō says that though friendly meetings may be held to which all existing sects can send representatives, there can be no concessions made to sects whose principles are contrary to one's own. It is only cold-hearted religionists who will be ready to go to that length. The zealous will go on fighting against each other in spite of occasional friendly conferences. There can be no compromise as regards fundamental principles.

The indiscriminate condemnation of Socialism by certain ignorant Christians the Seikyō Shimpō censures. Many of the principles of socialism are distinctly Christian in character, says this organ. Our religion preaches equality before God, the brotherhood of all races, the alleviation of the lot of the poor, the distribution of the riches collected by individuals among their needy fellow-creatures and many other such lines of conduct.

* * *
Nothing is more remarkable in the Japanese modern religious world than the excitement caused by the alleged visions and communings with God to which reference has been constantly made in these Summaries during the past few months. As one writer, Mr. Ebina Danjō, if we remember rightly, remarked, such statements as were made by Mr. Tsunajima and a few others on their personal experiences would attract very little attention in England or America. Nobody would consider that they threw any new light on religion or that they in themselves constituted any new kind of authority. But in Japan the general religious ignorance combined with superstition is so great that sober editors of magazines, Christian, Buddhist, Shintō, Confucian, Agnostic and Literary have felt it incumbent on them to collect and publish the opinions of almost every Japanese scholar of note on these so-called remarkable phenomena. Dr. Inoue Tetsujirō has published article after article on the subject of the alleged visions, revelations and direct communings with God. The Kirisutokyō Sekai, a few months ago, published in the form of a supplement the comments of over 20 noted Christians on the new phenomenon. We have not found time to wade through them, but such as we have examined state unequivocally that the writers do not believe it possible that God can be seen in the way represented by Tsunajima and others. Mr. Honda says, Yo ni wa kinrai yoku iu 見神, kenshi: naru mono no jikken nashi. Kami wa shikaku yō ni miru to ubeki mono naraji. Bishop Nikolai expresses himself as unable to understand the question, Has he seen God? God is ever present with him everywhere sustaining, guiding, comforting, but cannot be seen by mortal eye. Further quotation is needless. The articles which have appeared on this subject to our knowledge would make a good sized volume if collected. Some say the stir that has been made is a proof of the general ignorance and superstition of the Japanese people as a whole. Others take a more favourable view of it, seeing in it the germs of a great religious revival of the kind they desire to witness. While others, like Dr. Murakami, point out that the newspapers have worked up a big sensation over a very ordinary occurrence in the Buddhist world, where communings with Buddha have been going on incessantly.

The Kirisutokyō Sekai states that the Kumiai Kyōkai has now taken over all the Mission Stations hitherto supported by the American Board of Foreign Missions. They calculate that a sum of 17,000 yen will be required to constitute a capital fund for running the churches on the new lines. Out of this the American Board has generously contributed 9,000 yen. The remaining 8,000 will be raised by the Kumiai Churches. A special meeting will be held to celebrate the greatest of all events in the history of Congregationalism in Japan—the thorough independence of all the Kumiai Churches.

On June 2nd there appeared in the Gokyo (Methodist organ) an article on "The Study of Comparative Religion" in which the writer, Dr. Takagi Jintarō, asserted that not only native pastors but the foreign missionaries were very ignorant of the teaching of non-Christian sects. A reply to this criticism signed "Missionary" appears in the Gokyo of June 9th. The writer regards Dr. Takagi's remarks as a slander on the missionaries and as displaying great ignorance of facts. He says that comparative religion is taught at Methodist Theological Colleges in the States, Canada, and England, and that nearly all the missionaries in this country have been greatly influenced by their study of non-Christian religions and that they recognize that these religions all contain much truth. They are against their wholesale destruction. In their conception, Christianity comes to fulfil rather than to destroy. The writer calls upon Dr. Takagi to withdraw his charge or to substantiate it by more facts than he has given. As to the ignorance of Japanese pastors of Buddhism and Shintoism "Missionary" has nothing special to guide him, but he doubts whether it is as great as Dr. Takagi makes out. Dr. Takagi replies at great length in courteous tones. He admits that his language may have been somewhat too strong, but pleads earnestness of purpose as an excuse for that. Of anything like slander of the missionaries or even disrespect for them he was not guilty. The missionaries no doubt have paid some attention to the study of the non-Christian creeds. But the question is how far does their knowledge of the teaching of these creeds go? Not very far Dr. Takagi thinks (Iwayuru shiru to iu hani ni mo daishō kōkyō no betsu ari)*. If Dr. Takagi can not speak confidently as to the amount of knowledge of non-Christian religions possessed by the foreign missionaries, he is quite sure of his ground, he tells us, when he comes to discuss the acquaintance of native pastors with Buddhist and Shintō teaching. A man who should profess to be minutely acquainted with Christianity without having studied the Bible or Ecclesiastical history would only excite ridicule. The Buddhist Scriptures can only be studied in the Sanscrit, the Pali or the Chinese, language. How many pastors are there in Japan who can read the Buddhist Bible in either of these languages? Taking Japanese Buddhism only, how many pastors are there that could give a history of its development and the great variety of the doctrines it teaches? All that most of us know about Buddhism, says Dr. Takagi, are a few facts bearing on the life of Shaka Muni and a few of the doctrines he taught. It is true that one or two of our pastors are engaged in a special investigation of the creed, but among the remaining hundred workers there is profound ignorance. Dr. Takagi admits that he himself ranks with those who have neglected to study non-Christian forms of religious and ethical belief. He says that the ignorance of Confucianism in the Methodist Church is nearly as profound as that of Buddhism. He doubts whether there are many pastors who have ever read the Shisho (四書) and the Gokyo (五經)†, and as for the study of the teaching of the great Confucianists in this country—teaching that has influenced the whole tenor of Japanese moral thought—it has been almost entirely neglected. The doctrines of such moral magnates as Seikwa, Razan, Jinsai, Sorai, Tōjū, and Chūsai are a terra incognita to our Japanese Christian pastors. Who is there among them that could give a clear idea of the difference between the teaching of Japan's three great schools of Confucian philosophy, the Wang Yangming, the Chu-tsz, and the ancient schools? What I wrote on this subject, continues Dr. Takagi, is, sad to say, not slander as "Missionary" represents, but sober truth. The ignorance of our native pastors of Japanese ethical thought and teaching is deplorable. This ignorance is less excusable than that of foreign missionaries, for they find a great obstacle to the investigation of the history of Japanese religious and ethical thought in the difficulty of reading our books. If we said they were ignorant of much that it would benefit them to know in this country, we referred to them only incidentally and with the feeling that too much could not be expected of them, our chief object being to bring home to our native pastors the need of a closer study on their part of the peculiar religious and moral environment in which we Japanese pass our lives.

That in most of the Theological Halls of the West the teaching of comparative religion leaves much to be desired, that the text-books used are in many cases out of date, and that Japanese religious and ethical thought are but little known at most of the great seats of Western learning are incontrovertible facts to which Dr. Takagi has rightly drawn special attention.

* "In what is called knowledge there is a difference between a little knowledge and a great deal, between extensive knowledge and very limited knowledge."

THE BOYS' BRIGADE.

The second annual prize-giving of the 1st Yokohama Company of the Boys' Brigade took place in the Van Schaick Hall on Saturday evening and proved a very bright and pleasant affair. The Hall, which had been decorated with flags of every nation, the British and American ensigns of course holding pride of place, was well filled by an audience which grew more and more enthusiastic as the programme proceeded. The Company mustered almost its full strength, the only absentee among resident members being Private Norman Brockhurst (the winner not only of an attendance prize, and efficiency badge, and an ambulance badge and certificate, but also the winner of the special prize awarded for the best essay read at the Sunday morning services) who unfortunately was that morning taken to Hospital, having been accidentally shot in the foot by a boy companion. The cheers of his comrades which greeted the reading of his prize-list were perhaps all the more hearty out of sympathy for his misfortune. Colonel Hume, R.A., D.S.O., M.V.O., Military Attaché of H.B.M.'s Embassy, presided and was supported on the platform by Capt. L. W. Tebb, Lieut. H. W. Kilby, Lieut. Nicolle; Messrs. C. V. Sale, D. H. Blake, Jas. Walter, A. Bellamy Brown, and Rev. J. L. Dearing, D.D., members of Committee.

After an invocation by the Chaplain (Rev. J. L. Dearing),

CAPT. TEBB said:—On occasions such as this, long speeches are out of place. However, as prize-givings indicate the close of sessions, I feel that I must, with your permission, take this opportunity of expressing on behalf of myself and brother-officers our heartiest appreciation of the practical support we have received in the work of the Company from all sections of this community. This past session has been a very gratifying one from all points of view. The attendance records show an improvement on those of last session and the interests of the Company have also enlarged. Drill with rifles has been carried on throughout the whole of this session; the Ambulance section has been enthusiastically conducted by Dr. Davies and Lieut. Nicolle. Rifle practice at the Government range at Omori has been inaugurated for the elder members and the Company is indebted to Colonel Hume for his generosity in presenting a prize for competition, under conditions which have now been arranged. The prizes which are about to be presented by Colonel Hume have all been donated by friends of the Company, including Mrs. Walter, Mrs. Neville, Miss Dunstan, Rev. W. Weston, Colonel Hume, Messrs. Montague Kirkwood, C. M. Birnie, and G. N. Fairhurst, and Mrs. Cornell, of London. These prizes were, I may say, entirely unsolicited, and the best thanks of the Company are extended to the generous donors. I cannot resume my seat without expressing to the Committee best thanks of the officers of the Company for the practical aid they have rendered us right through the session: and also to the many gentlemen who have contributed to the success attending the Sunday morning services by their appropriate addresses. Of course, this Company is but a small section of the Boys' Brigade organisation. The total roll of members all over the world cannot fall short of 90,000 and if we include, as we may fairly do, the kindred organisations that have now been formed on similar lines, it is within the mark to say that not fewer than 150,000 boys are thus brought under Christian influence and healthy physical training as a direct result of the Boys' Brigade movement. The longer one lives, the more emphatic grows the conviction that the Boys' Brigade is a powerful force, combining in its varied spheres of activity all the essentials constituting the "mens sana in corpore sano" and instilling into the minds of members a lofty ideal of Christian service. ("Hear, hear.") I trust that this Company may long be worthy of the practical and enthusiastic support which has been extended to it by this community since its inception. (Loud applause.) It affords us very great pleasure to have Colonel Hume with us to distribute the prizes this evening. (Applause.) It is but further evidence of his practical interest in the company that he has come to take part in this interesting function, and I would like to take the opportunity of congratulating him on behalf of the company, on the still recent further appreciation by his Sovereign of his marked ability. (Applause.)

Col. HUME, who was greeted with loud applause on rising, said that it gave him great pleasure to come down from Tokyo to present the prizes to the Boys' Brigade. It was a pleasure, because every member of the company was so keen on his work and evidently kept the objects of the Boys' Brigade steadily before him. With regard to the congratulations conveyed to him by Capt. Tebb, he could but thank them very sincerely. Had he not purchased a newspaper that evening to while away the tedium of the railway ride, he would have heard the first about the bestowal of the order from Capt. Tebb himself. (Applause.)

Col. HUME then distributed the prizes as follows:—

ATTENDANCE PRIZES:—Awarded to members who have obtained the highest possible marks for attendance at Drill and Sunday Morning Service, and who have a good record for conduct during the Session. Lateness at either of these meetings on more than one occasion renders forfeiture of prize. Pte. Sale (clean record; neither late, absent nor sick) Corporal Neville, Privates Bamberger, Brockhurst, Dearing, H. Hornstein, Neville, Tipple, Wilgress.

DRILL PRIZES:—Awarded to the three boys who are adjudged the most proficient in drill at the close of the session. Ptes. A. Gorman, Holmes, Wilgress. One prize (specially for drill) awarded to the best-all-round N.C.O. Corporal Bagnall.

EFFICIENCY BADGES:—Awarded to members who were not absent from Drill or Sunday Service on more than two occasions during the Session, and whose conduct has been meritorious. Corporals Gray and Neville. Lce. Corpl. Hornstein. Ptes. Bailey, Bamberger, Binder, Brockhurst, Cummings, Dearing, A. Gorman, P. Gorman, Graham, H. Hornstein, P. Hornstein, Kenderdine, Neville, Nicolle, Sale, K. Tresize, J. Tresize, Tipple, Wilgress.

CAPTAIN'S PRIZE:—Awarded by the Captain to the N.C.O. who has performed his duties in the most satisfactory manner during the Session: Corporal Neville.

COPY OF REPORT OF NEIL GORDON MUNRO. M.B.C.M., EDIN., RE "FIRST AID" EXAMINATION.

Captain TEBB, Boys' Brigade, Yokohama.

DEAR SIR,—By the accompanying sheet you will observe that 9 candidates have passed out of the 16 who presented themselves.

The standard which I adopted as the minimum of efficiency was 60 per cent. The highest number of marks obtained was 78 and the lowest 32, thus showing a fairly high general level upon which the corps may be congratulated.

As this is a "first year's" course, thorough familiarity with practical work could not be expected. If the same progress be maintained during another year, the results will be most gratifying.

Yours faithfully, (Signed) N. GORDON MUNRO, M.B.C.M., Edin. Univ.

AMBULANCE BADGES & CERTIFICATES:—Gained by members who obtained 60 per cent. of possible marks at the practical examination in "First Aid" conducted by Neil Gordon Munro, M.B.C.M., Edin.:—Pte. Graham, 78 per cent.; Pte. Kenderdine, 78 per cent.; Pte. Neville, 74 per cent.; Pte. Brockhurst, 73 per cent.; Lce. Corpl. Hornstein, 72 per cent.; Pte. Tipple, 68 per cent.; Pte. Worden, 67 per cent.; Corpl. Neville, 66 per cent.; Pte. Dearing, 60 per cent. These badges and Certificates will be procured from Head Quarters and handed to above members prior to next Session.

SPECIAL PRIZE:—Awarded for the best essay read at the Sunday Morning Services throughout the Session, Pte. Brockhurst, Subject, "St. Paul."

SQUAD CHALLENGE MEDAL:—Awarded to the N.C.O. whose squad shows the best record for attendance throughout the Session. (To be retained for one year): Won by Squad No. 3. Lce. Corpl. Hornstein.

PROMOTIONS:—Corporal Bagnall to be Sergeant; Lance Corporal Hornstein to be Corporal.

INTER-COMPANY CHALLENGE MEDAL:—Open for competition between the 1st. Yokohama Coy. B.B., and the 1st Shanghai Coy. B.B., and awarded annually to the Company which has secured the highest average weekly percentage of possible attendances per month the most number of months during the Session. Won by 1st. Yokohama Company B.B. Average weekly percentage (including absences on account of sickness) 95.32 per cent. Awarded to the senior F.C.O., on behalf of the Company, Sergeant Bagnall.

The awards having been distributed, Col. HUME said that he regretted that he had not prizes to present to the officers of the Company, for they well deserved them. (Applause.) But they had their reward, doubtless, in seeing how efficient the Company was, how keen every unit was to do his work, and in the admirable esprit de corps with which they had inspired the boys. (Applause.)

The following programme was then presented; those items having a * against them being encored:—

Pianoforte Solo....."Romanze"...Heinrich Lichner. (Pte.) A. Tipple.

Song..."Twinkidillo".....English Country Song. Dr. D. N. B. Emerson.

Recitation..."The Bivouac Fire"...Samuel K. Cowan. (Pte.) Neville.

Song..."Mandalay".....Gerard F. Cobb. Col. C. V. Hume, R.A., D.S.O., M.V.O.

*Pianoforte Solo..."The Battle March of Delhi" Miss Blundell. Fridham.

*Recitation..."The Bold Dragon." (Pte.) Binder.

*Violin Solo..."Serenade".....Gabriel Marie. Mr. H. A. Poole.

*Song..."Lahdy Dah!".....S. M. Birbeck. (Pte.) Gorman.

Recitation..."The Alarm" (Pte.) Worden.

*Song..."The Powder-Monkey".....Michael Watson. (Capt.) L. D. Tebb.

YOKOHAMA FOREIGN BOARD OF TRADE.

Committee:—Messrs. C. V. Sale (Chairman), M. Beart (Vice-Chairman), W. T. Payne, D. H. Blake, V. A. Caesar Hawkins, J. A. Harmsen, V. R. Bowden, J. T. Griffin, and F. Strahler.

TOKYO EXHIBITION.

Through the offices of the Board, put into motion at the request of the Japanese Authorities, Yokohama firms, intending exhibitors at the forthcoming exhibition in Tokyo, to be opened on the 21st of March next, have been brought together. After two meetings had been held, a committee of exhibitors was appointed to meet the exhibition officials in Tokyo. The committee consist of Messrs. W. Strachan & Co., Limited, Messrs. Faber & Voigt, and Mr. F. W. Horne, and their first meeting with the officials took place on the 5th inst.

MAILS TO KOBE.

A recent paragraph in the local press stated that the late negotiations of the Board had not ensured the despatch of mails by the fast train leaving Hiránuma at 7.12 p.m.

The Director of Posts states that since arrangements were made, at the instance of the Board, to increase the number of bags despatched by the fast train, there has not been any occasion upon which mail received prior to 5.30 p.m. has been held back for the later train. The public are reminded that mail posted after 5.30 p.m. is not in time for the fast train.

DELIVERY OF FOREIGN MAILS.

It transpired at a meeting of the Committee of the Board on the 14th instant, that a very great improvement had taken place in the delivery of foreign mails in Yokohama since the representations made by the Board to the Japanese postal authorities and the advent of the present Director of Posts to Yokohama. This is a matter for congratulation, both to the postal authorities and to the public.

FIRES.

A Hiroshima telegram says that on the night of June 20th, fire broke out in the dwelling of Dr. Sato. He and his daughter lost their lives.

A disastrous fire occurred early on the morning of June 25th at North Sanjo, Sapporo, destroying forty-eight houses. Twenty persons were killed and one was severely injured.

On the night of June 24th, fire broke out at Shikina-machi, Otaru. Two hundred and forty-seven buildings were burned down. Negligence was the cause.

A Seoul telegram reports that at 9 p.m. on June 24th, fire took place near the South-gate of Pyong Yang, burning down twenty-eight buildings.

A small fire broke out in the forepeak of the O. & Q. steamer Doric during her last stay in Hongkong. Very little damage was done.

THE ASIATIC SOCIETY OF JAPAN.

A General Meeting of the Asiatic Society of Japan was held at the British Embassy on Wednesday, June 20th, at four o'clock. The Honorary President, Sir Claude MacDonald, having sent a letter of regret that absence from the city made his attendance at the meeting impossible, the Vice-President for Tokyo, Professor Lloyd, took the Chair.

The Chairman said that the minutes of the last meeting had been published and so might be taken without reading. There being no other business before the meeting, he would at once call for the papers, of which there were two, to be read. The first paper was by Karel Jan Hora, Esq. entitled "Notes on Kamo Chōmei's Life and Work." As the author could not be present, the paper was read by Mr. E. H. Vickers.

The paper is intended to add some information to that given by Mr. J. M. Dixon in Volume XX. of the Transactions on Kamo Chōmei and his "Hōjōki."

The date of Kamo Chōmei's birth is unknown. Inference from statements in the "Hōjōki" puts it in the period of Kiyūan (1145-61). Chōmei's father and grandfather both held the position of "negi" in the Kamojinsha in Kyoto. Chōmei played well the biwa and the flute. Under Minamoto no Toshiyori and the priest Eshun, he studied poetry. His skill in composing "Waka" poems led the Emperor Gotoba Tenno to appoint him registrar in the Waka Office—which collected and registered popular poems—, probably as a reward for this poem to the Emperor:

"Yo mo sugara/hitori mi yama no/maki no ha ni Kumoru mo sumeru/ari ake no tsuki":

which freely rendered means:

"Through the whole night alone.

On the distant mountain's leaf of maki appears

With a pure heart even this moon looks clear."

Disappointed in his wish to succeed his father in the position of "negi," Chōmei resigned from the Waka Office, became a monk and for thirty years lived in a hut which he built at the foot of Mount Ohara. Then he passed a few years with his admirer, the Shōgun Minamoto no Sanetomo, at Kamakura. Again he withdrew from the world and passed his remaining years in seclusion and poverty in a hut on Hino no Sotoyama. In vain the Emperor Gotoba no Tenno sought to recall him to his former office. To the pleadings of the Emperor's messenger, he replied with the poem:—

"Sumiwabinu/geni ya mi yama no/maki no ha ni Kumoru to iishi/tsuki mo miru beki."

Meaning:—"Live satisfied: On the distant mountain's leaf of maki appears the former clouded moon. Let me remain and gaze at her."

The origin of the family name Kamo in a strange legend of immaculate conception, as related in the editor's introduction to the "Hōjōki," is then described. The paper ended with a list of Chōmei's works and some comment thereon.

At the conclusion of the reading of Mr. Hora's paper, the Chairman referred to the fact that a comparison has been made, in one of the earlier volumes of the Asiatic Society's Transactions, of Kamo Chōmei with Wordsworth. For himself, he did not think that comparison was a very good one. It is true, that Wordsworth was a poet of nature, as was also Kamo; but Wordsworth was a careless writer whose exuberance of thought led him to verbosity, while Kamo, from the very fact of his being under the limitations of Japanese versification, was obliged to be curt, precise, and to compress his thoughts into the smallest limits. He (the Chairman) thought that a far better comparison might be established between Kamo and Tennyson. In both these poets would be found a great love of nature, and equally, in both of them, a compressed diction which showed great carefulness in composition.

Mr. Gubbins said that it was difficult to make any close comparison between Japanese and English poetry. So far as careful finish was concerned, a resemblance might certainly be traced between the poetry of Kamo Chōmei, and indeed all Japanese poetry, and the work of Tennyson. But if an analogy had to be established at all, he was inclined to think that the selection of Wordsworth, as being a poet of nature, for comparison with Chōmei was correct.

In reply to Mr. Gubbins' criticisms, the Chairman said that he had been thinking at the time of some remarks made by Professor Chamberlain in his article on Bashō and the Japanese epigram, in which he pointed out how closely Tennyson came, in many of his minute word-pictures, to the condensed beauties of the Japanese epigram.

Dr. Greene was greatly impressed by the fact that the author's works are specially difficult to translate. The figures of Kamo are extremely complicated and therefore difficult to render in English. Perhaps only a man like the late Lafcadio Hearn might do something near justice to Kamo in translation. The translations of such an eminent scholar as Mr. Aston and also those of Mr. Dixon seem to leave something to be desired.

Mr. Vickers stated that the author of the paper just read was evidently of Dr. Greene's view. He (the author) had, with doubt and hesitation, offered some specimens of translation by both Mr. Aston and Mr. Dixon from Chōmei which seemed unsatisfactory. With these, he gave the ideographic text and his own literal translation. But Mr. Jan Hora had specially asked the Council to omit this part of the paper, if the Council thought it better to do so—the view which was in fact taken by those members of Council who had the paper under special consideration.

Dr. Asakawa said that it would be interesting to compare Kamo Chōmei with Yoshida Kenkō, the author of the "Tsurezuregusa," who flourished a century after Chōmei. Both forsook the world and became famous as Buddhist poets, so that they are often confused in the popular mind. They, however, lived in ages the conditions of which were vastly different, for in Chōmei's time the social structure was rapidly tending toward feudalism. And yet both ages were similar in that the ruling powers were, to all appearance, passing from bad to worse. Again, the Buddhism of Kenkō was perhaps largely influenced by the Zen tenet, the coming of which into Japan probably antedated Chōmei's "Hōjōki," and yet the simple and severe Buddhism of the latter poet as against the more elaborate and mundane tendencies of the sect current in Kyoto suggested the need of a Zen sect and largely foreshadowed its prevalence in later times. Chōmei and Kenkō may be regarded as indices to times and thoughts at once in contrast, and in sympathy with each other, and their lives are full of close parallels that never meet.

The Chairman said all would agree that a comparison such as Dr. Asakawa suggested between Kamo and Yoshida would be extremely interesting, and that it would be still more interesting, if it came from Dr. Asakawa's pen. They all hoped therefore that he might make it for the Society.

The Chairman himself then read the paper on "The Study of Korean from the Standpoint of a Student of Japanese," by A. H. Lay, Esq.

Mr. Lay's paper, which occupied about one half-hour in the reading, dealt with the points of similarity between the languages of Korea and Japan. These similarities the author finds: (1) In the identity of the word-order in the sentence, which shows that the processes of thought in Korean are identical with those in Japanese—a fact which makes the acquisition of Japanese easy to Koreans, and vice versa, that of Korean to Japanese. (2) In the similarity of inflectional methods, such as the formation of the plural by reduplication, or by the addition of some noun used to express number, as also in that peculiarity of Far-Eastern speech by which adjectives and adverbs are treated, not as independent parts of speech, but as sub divisions of the verb.

In the actual vocabularies of the two countries, the author did not find much resemblance, though there are a certain number of native words in each language which clearly betray a common origin. The number of such words, he thought, might be much increased by further research, but independently of the words of native origin, both languages possess a large stock of Chinese words which they use in common and with but slightly varying pronunciations. This common stock is being constantly increased by the introduction of new words, imported through Japan, and used to denote the many things which have recently come into existence in Korea as a consequence of the great extension of the Japanese influence in the Peninsula.

Mr. Gubbins said he thought that Mr. Lay's very interesting paper had, if he might say so, one rather grave defect. This was the insufficient stress laid on the difficulties of pronunciation which lay in the path of the student of the Korean language. There were certain vowel sounds the variations between which it was difficult for the foreign ear to follow, but in the correct pronunciation of these sounds by the foreigner lay all the difference between being understood or not. There were initial or aspirated consonants very troublesome and perplexing both to distinguish one from the other when heard and also to pronounce; and there was the great stumbling block created by the final consonant in Korean which was only half sounded. He had been assured by Koreans that the English language had no proper final consonant, and that to a Korean ear there was no difference between the pronunciation of the word "kick" in English and the word "kiku" in Japanese.

In the course of his paper, the author had alluded to the Chinese-Korean side of Korean and to the increasing use of dissyllabic words formed from Chinese. The immense growth of the Japanese language in the same direction was a fact familiar to them all, and in connection with this very important matter he had heard people interested in the subject say that, if Japan went to China for materials with which to form the words she needed to express the new ideas she had received during the last thirty years or more, she was doing no more than other countries had done, and were still doing, in borrowing from the Latin and Greek. He thought, however, that there was one great difference between the two processes. In the one case, the languages borrowed from were dead, and this fact of itself tended, he thought, in some measure at least to diminish the scope of this borrowing. In the other case, the language to which recourse was had was a living language and that too of a neighboring country; and under these circumstances, not only could the same check not operate, but the tendency might be in the opposite direction. However this might be, there could be little doubt that in the present situation of Korea the introduction of new words of the class indicated would proceed more rapidly even than had been the case in Japan.

Mr. Isawa Shuji, was much impressed by the paper, especially by what the author said concerning the final consonants. A close study of old Japanese would impress us still more with the similarity between the two languages. For example, the final "p" of old Japanese is lost, but it survives in the Korean. Then the Japanese "f" sound appears as "p" in the Korean. Finally, the "m" and "n" sounds met in Korean are faithful distinctions which had existed also in the old Japanese.

Dr. Asakawa said that, concerning the resemblance of Korean and Japanese words, it is interesting to note that studies in Korean are being made for a serious purpose by critical scholars of the first rank, namely by Professors Miyazaki and Nakada, of the College of the Imperial University of Tokyo. They are studying the Korean, Ainu and other languages, with a view to tracing, by means of philological analysis, the origin of early Japanese institutions among those of the neighboring races.

The Chairman, referring to Mr. Lay's remark that further search might bring to light many more resemblances between the vocabularies of the two languages, said that in his judgment the resemblance would be found, not between Korean and the educated Japanese of the capital, but between Korean and the ordinary dialect of the northern and north-western districts of Japan, which differed very widely from the standard language of Tokyo.

The Chairman said that they were grateful to Mr. Hora and Mr. Lay for their interesting papers; and that the Honorary Secretary, in thanking the authors, might especially tell them that much discussion was elicited by their papers, and that the meeting devoted to them had been one of the most interesting held in recent years.

The Corresponding Secretary, Mr. Vickers, asked permission to say that the Honorary President had sent from Karuizawa a letter to express regret at his inability to be present, that he (Mr. Vickers) felt sure of expressing the sentiment of all present when he added warm appreciation of the kindness of His Excellency and Lady MacDonald in to-day extending to the Society the hospitality of the British Embassy—a cordial hospitality which the Society had this year several times enjoyed.

The Chairman declared the meeting adjourned, after which refreshments were served to those present.

CRICKET.

Lowering skies, a low temperature, and a very wet wicket were the prevailing conditions in Yokohama on Saturday, but they did not prevent a very good game from coming off between teams captained respectively by Mr. H. W. Kilby and Dr. Emerson. Going to bat first, Kilby's team knocked up 150, the highest score being the Captain's himself, 57 not out. This included nine 4's, one 6, and two 3's, showing that he has got his eye in very early this season. The next best score for the side was Johnstone McClure's 24, which included four boundaries; Spencer Smith coming next with 20, with three boundaries to his credit. E. N. Lambert took three wickets for 22 runs; H. J. Emms securing four for 34 runs; but against all the seven bowlers tried not one "extra" went down on the score-sheet.

Dr. Emerson's Eleven made a rather sensational opening, five maiden overs being bowled ere the score began, while Strome was sent back to the Pavilion by Spencer Smith with a duck. Then Crawford got W. Ross away for 2 and the fun began, 50 being hoisted ere the second wicket fell. Crawford made four boundaries, and Lambert five ere their partnership was dissolved. Dr. Emerson's useful 28 included four 4's, and two 3's. H. J. Emms going in tenth man made 29, not out, in capital style, securing four boundaries. The whole side were out for 158, thus winning by eight runs. Score:—

THE LATE REV. H. B. PRICE.

The Kobe Herald in recording the death of Rev. H. B. Price, which took place in St. Luke's Hospital, Tokyo, on Wednesday, says that he had laboured for about twenty years in connection with the work of the Southern Presbyterian Mission in this country, and for about eight years of that time in Kobe and Hyogo. While living in Kobe he took a most active interest in the affairs of the Union Church, and in addition to his missionary work acceptably filled the position of Acting Pastor. A year ago last January he left Kobe for the Homeland, where he busied himself making addresses on Mission work in Japan, and in other religious endeavours. Mr. and Mrs. Price reached Japan on their return last Tuesday week by the steamer Dakota. Two days before reaching Yokohama Mr. Price was taken ill, and on arriving there he proceeded at once to the hospital in Tsukiji, Tokio, instead of continuing the journey on to his port. From the news that has reached us we conclude that Mr. Price was carried away by an acute attack of gastritis and appendicitis, from both of which we are told that he was suffering.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

The geshi, or summer solstice, was entered on June 22nd.

Two cases of plague were reported on June 27th at Kobe.

The British squadron under Admiral Moore arrived at Kobe on June 28th from Miyajima.

It is announced, says Punch, that the proprietors of M.A.P. hopes that the P.T.O. will soon go to P.O.T.

New waste silk has been put on the Yokohama market. On June 21st, filature kibiso was sold at yen 102.50.

A direct exchange of Postal Money Orders between Japan and the Argentine Republic comes into force from July 1.

The Rt. Hon. H. Haldane has selected Colonel Hobbs of the Army Service Corps to proceed to America to inspect the meat packing conditions there.

Lady MacDonald and the British Ambassador proceeded to Numadzu on June 21st, arriving there at 4 p.m. They put up at the Hoyo-kwan Hotel.

It is reported by a Nagano telegram that a postman was found murdered on June 26th in the district of North Adzumi. Postal articles which had been in his possession were stolen. His assailant is still at large.

On June 27th, a 27-cent. gun exploded in an ammunition factory in Osaka while casting was going on. The building was destroyed and seven workmen were killed or injured. There is no report as to the cause.

Mr. Anraku, Chief of the Metropolitan Police, paid a visit on June 26th, to the hin-min-kutsu (the poor quarter) of Shin-ami-cho, Shiba, and examined the conditions of the people. He will visit similar places in Asakusa, Honjo, and Azabu.

The Che-Kook Shimun (of Seoul) says that the Korean Education Department has decided to renew the contract of Mr. T. E. Hallifax as Assistant Master of the Imperial Government English School—his former contract having expired.

It is reported by telegram from Zentsuji that Sergeant K. Kuramoto, belonging to the Marugame Regimental headquarters, on June 23rd, tried unsuccessfully to shoot a soldier with a revolver. The following morning, he committed suicide at his office with the same arm.

The wedding has taken place of Mr. Masanosuke, first son of Viscount Hayashi, Minister for Foreign Affairs, and Miss Yuki, daughter of Mr. S.

Kawasaki. On the evening of June 29th, a dinner party in celebration of the marriage will be held at the Mitsui Club, Yuraku-cho, Tokyo.

Viscount T. Tanuma, descendant of the Kokubo feudal lord in Kadzusa province, was deprived of his rights as a noble in accordance with the third clause of Art. 15 of the Peers' Law. The Fiji states that he was recently declared insolvent in the Chiba District Court.

It is reported from Kiukiang that the French cruiser Décidée, while trying to reach Nanchangfu in the Poyang Lake, ran ashore at a place called Mankong, about thirty miles from the entrance. She was believed to be badly ashore, and a considerable rise in the lake would be necessary to refloat her.

On the afternoon of the 17th instant, says the P. & T. Times, during the Circus matinee, Prince, the largest and most ferocious of the lions, broke out of his cage, and jumped upon the back of one of the elephants. There was instant confusion and affright, the people who were present rushing out in panic. The elephant in its fright and in attempting to dislodge the lion almost broke through the meshed into the street, in which case serious results would have followed, but the trainer drove the beast off. It then made a rush for the small pony which performs for Madame Spani and mauled the poor little animal with one of its huge paws. Mr. Schaad, the trainer, however, retained his presence of mind, and driving the lion into a corner, shot him dead. The incident created the wildest excitement.

The British squadron under Vice-Admiral Moore arrived at Kure from Saseho on the evening of June 23rd. After the exchange of salutes, Japanese naval officers visited the flagship. Subsequently a dinner party was given on the Japanese flagship Fuji in honour of Vice-Admiral Moore and his officers. In the evening, a number of beautiful fire-works were sent up at Shingu by the citizens. On Sunday, June 24th, the Japanese naval authorities and the citizens jointly gave a luncheon at the Yoshikawa Hotel to the British officers. The same afternoon, Vice-Admiral Moore visited the Kure arsenal, being guided by Admiral Kitakoga. On Monday, the British ships will leave for Miyajima. It is arranged that Government officials with the authorities of Edajima College and the Kure Naval Station will hold a garden party on June 26th at Itsukushima in honour of the British officers.

A terrible motor-car accident occurred last month at Couseque Bridge, on the steep incline between Enraygues and Mur-de-Barrez, in the Aveyron. Dr. Bonnefé, his wife and father-in-law, M. Cabanettes, were in the vehicle with a footman. The doctor, who was steering, lost control of the car, which rushed down the hill at a fearful speed. The breaks snapped as the automobile was nearing the bottom of the incline, at the foot of which is a new bridge across the torrent Goult. The speed at which the car was travelling caused it to swerve across the road, and it pitched a hundred feet below into the rocky gorge of the Truyere. The footman jumped before the car reached the precipice, and escaped unhurt. M. Cabanettes was killed instantly, but Mme. Bonnefé lingered a few moments and her husband a quarter of an hour before death put an end to their agony.

THE LAW COURTS.

CHARGE AGAINST THE "BOYEKI."

The criminal case brought against Mr. Y. Kubota, nominal editor of the Boyeiki Shimpō, Yokohama, who is charged with having published a report in which, it is alleged, he injured the reputation of the Yokohama Wire Manufacturing Co., came up on June 22nd in the Yokohama District Court before Judge Satomi and Public Prosecutor Shiki.

Mr. Hioki was for the defence.

At the outset of the examination, the Public Prosecutor stated that the Boyeiki published a report under the caption of "Appeal to the public against the Yokohama Wire Manufacturing Co." which appeared from June 4th to 16th. The essential points of the report were that during the war the company sold to the Russians wire to be used on warships and that Mr. M. Onishi, one of the directors of the company, embezzled five thousand yen belonging to the firm.

The accused said that the report was compiled from various correspondence, etc., which he ascertained to be trustworthy after personal investigation. He, however, did not intend to injure the reputation of the company or of Mr. Onishi but to inform the public of the illegal transactions and conduct concerned.

Accused's Counsel said that the case should not be dealt with by the Criminal Court. Counsel then asked the Court to adjourn the trial for preparation of evidence.

The Judge gave consent to the request and the case was adjourned sine die.

ALLEGED INCENDIARISM.

The trial of Mr. Frederick J. Curtis, an employee of Messrs. Carl Rhode and Co., who is charged with having attempted to set fire to his dwelling, was resumed on June 22nd in the Yokohama District Court.

Examined by Counsel, the accused said that after the fire, he ordered one of his servants to inform the Bluff Police Office of the accident, his purpose being to ascertain the cause of the outbreak. Accused's Counsel asked the Court for leave to examine Kisaragi, one of the accused's servants, as a witness but the Judge dismissed the request.

The trial being concluded, the Public Prosecutor made a lengthy speech in which he said that kerosene and shavings were found in the bathroom where the fire occurred; the kerosene can which should have been full was found almost empty immediately after the accident; the accused just before the fire entered the bathroom but not for bathing purposes. The Public Prosecutor concluded that the accused attempted to cause a fire with the intention of collecting two thousand yen from the insurance office concerned.

The accused refused to admit the argument of the Public Prosecutor, and his Counsel delivered a lengthy speech in reply. He held that there was no direct evidence of incendiarism in so far as the accused was concerned.

Judgment was given on June 25th in the Yokohama District Court in the criminal case of Mr. Frederick J. Curtis (a naturalized Japanese, Takahashi Yeikichi by name), an employee of Messrs. Carl Rhode and Co., who was charged with having attempted to set fire to his dwelling.

The Judge said that the accused's conduct must be regarded as willful arson for the purpose of obtaining two thousand yen, for which he insured his property with a fire insurance office. The accused should therefore be dealt with under Article 402 of the Penal Code—whosoever shall have willingly set fire to buildings or houses, inhabited or serving as the dwelling of another, shall be punished with death. As the accused's crime was merely an attempt, two grades were lowered from the ordinary punishment. He was sentenced to twelve years' penal servitude.

Mr. F. J. Curtis, who was sentenced on Monday to twelve years' penal servitude on a charge of incendiarism, appealed the following day against the judgment. On June 27th, the records in the case were transferred from the Yokohama District Court to the Tokyo Appeal Court.

BROWN v. COCK-EYE.

A case filed by Mr. J. Brown, No. 123, against Tam Yat, a Chinese tailor carrying on business under the name of Cock-Eye, at No. 81, claiming yen 254 and interest came up on June 26th in the Yokohama District Court before Judge Nagata.

Plaintiff was represented by Mr. S. Yano, and the defendant by Mr. Ideura.

It may be remembered that the case was heard on May 3rd. As the defendant was then absent judgment was given in favour of the plaintiff and the Judge further decided that distraint should be granted on a deposit of a hundred yen. Defendant subsequently lodged an objection to the decision.

Plaintiff's Counsel stated that in October last, Mr. Brown disposed of at the office of Messrs. Eyton and Pratt, No. 77, 367 yards of navy cloth, the cost being yen 1.60 per yard, and Defendant in October last purchased 367 yards of navy cloth by auction, at yen 1.60 a yard, in all yen 580.80, from the plaintiff on the condition that payment be made on November 4th. Later at the request of the defendant plaintiff took 79½ yards of the woollen cloth for yen 126.80. Of the balance, yen 455, the defendant paid two hundred only and since then has failed to pay. Plaintiff's Counsel asked the Court for an order to temporarily distraint the property of the defendant as a means of enforcing payment.

Defendant's Counsel contended that the Chinese tailor purchased 283 yards of navy cloth from the plaintiff through Messrs Eyton and Pratt at the price of sixty sen per yard. On the day of payment, the purchaser paid to the plaintiff all that was incurred. Later, the plaintiff presented to the defendant a bill in which the price was made to be one yen and sixty sen instead of sixty sen only. Defendant protested to Mr. Brown as to the difference in the price. No definite explanation was given by plaintiff. Defendant therefore believed that the difference in the price was a mistake on the part of the plaintiff.

Plaintiff's Counsel asked the Judge for leave to summon Mr. J. L. O. Eyton as a witness as to the transaction between the parties, and a woollen cloth merchant as an expert to state the price of the navy cloth in dispute. Counsel said that he would produce a sample piece of the cloth at the next hearing.

The Judge decided to summon Mr. Eyton only and adjourned the case till July 6th.

CHARGE AGAINST THE "BOYEKI."

The criminal case brought against Mr. Y. Kubota, nominal editor of the Boyeiki Shimpō, Yokohama, who is charged with having published a report in which, it is alleged, he injured the reputation of the Yokohama Wire Manufacturing Co., came up on June 27th in the Yokohama District Court before Judge Satomi and Public Prosecutor Shiki.

Mr. Hioki, the accused's Counsel, made a lengthy speech as to the nature of the transactions between the Yokohama Wire Co. and Messrs. Ginsburg & Co. for the supply of wire to be used on war ships. During the war, the Wire Co. sold a quantity of wire to Russian merchants. At that time, the Jimmin of Tokyo published a report relative to the transaction. In March, 1904, the Yokohama Wire Co. sold a quantity of wire to be used on warships to Messrs. Ginsburg & Co., at Nagasaki. The wire was transported by railway as wire for electric light purposes and was addressed to the Nagasaki Electric Light Co. On March 22nd in the same year, F. Okano, the Chief accountant of the Yokohama Wire Co., received seventy-eight thousand yen at the Yokohama office of the Russian firm. The amount was paid by a cheque on the Hongkong and Shanghai Banking Corporation. Okano deposited the cheque with the Third Bank on current account. When the transaction was disclosed by the Jimmin, the Yokohama Wire Co. tried contradictions in the newspapers. The effort, however, proved unsuccessful. While endeavouring to discredit the report of the Jimmin and subsequently of the Boyeiki, Mr. Onishi, one of the directors of the Yokohama Wire Co. is reported to have spent yen 10,700. In connexion with this, there arose two cases, namely, a claim on a promissory note by B. Yoshikawa against Mr. Onishi; and a criminal case against Dr. Ichinobe, President of the Kanagawa Hospital, who is undergoing preliminary examination in the Yokohama District Court. Okano and eleven other employees of the Wire Co. were examined at the Tokyo headquarters of the gendarmes. Counsel asked the Court for leave to examine the official records of the foregoing cases; the business books of the Yokohama railway office; R. Sato, a transportation agent of Kanagawa, who forwarded the wire to Nagasaki; G. Suzuki and six other employees of the Wire Co. as witnesses; and an expert to ascertain the nature of wire to be used (1) for electric light work and (2) for warlike purposes.

The Public Prosecutor contended that there was no necessity to examine into these matters and further said that as the criminal case against Dr. Ichinobe was still under preliminary examination, consequently the record concerned could not be disclosed in open Court.

The Judge decided to summon the witnesses required by Counsel. The other application as to examination of records were reserved. The case was adjourned sine die.

CLAIM FOR SHORT DELIVERY.

A case in which B. Sudzuki, a rice merchant, claims yen 5,095.50 against Messrs Helm Bros. for short delivery of bean-cakes was brought up on June 28th in the Yokohama District Court before Judge Nagata.

Plaintiff was represented by Messrs. Akiyama and Ikeda and the defendant by Mr. Sato.

Plaintiff's Counsel stated that Messrs. Moller Bros' steamer Erroll brought twelve thousand pieces of bean-cake on June 16th last from Shanghai to Yokohama. Five thousand pieces of the foregoing were consigned to the plaintiff. Of the gross quantity, ten thousand two hundred pieces were landed by Nakayama, a landing agent, and the remainder by Messrs. Helm Bros. The Japanese agent gave delivery of nine hundred pieces only to plaintiff against five thousand, and Messrs. Helm Bros. eight hundred only for the remainder, namely forty-one hundred. Consequently there was a deficiency of thirty-three hundred left undelivered either by the Japanese agent or Messrs. Helm Bros.

Defendants Counsel said that Messrs. Helm Bros. merely landed the cargo as Nakayama was unable to accomplish the work as requested by the agents. They did not make any contract with the plaintiff as to the landing work.

Plaintiff's Counsel said that the Japanese merchant did not make any contract for the landing of the bean-cake with Messrs. Helm Bros. The latter, however, should be responsible for the short delivery as they were the landing agents.

Defendants' Counsel contended that Messrs. Helm Bros. were agents for the Erroll, and at that time, Nakayama acted as landing agents. One of the clauses of the bill of lading stipulated that the ship should not be responsible for damage, shortage, etc. Therefore the plaintiff, at first, instituted a claim in the Court against Nakayama. The case was dismissed. Counsel further said that plaintiff did not know shipping business so that he extended the claim to defendants, who were quite free from responsibility.

Plaintiff's Counsel asked the Court to examine the record of the case between plaintiff and Nakayama, for guidance in the present case, and T. Inouye, a landing agent; Yokokawa of the Yokohama Customs, and K. Nakaniwa of Messrs. Helm Bros. as witnesses.

The Judge gave consent to the request and adjourned the hearing till July 19th.

The packing house proprietors of Chicago, all men of great wealth, have, it is asserted, vowed themselves to the political destruction of President Roosevelt, and hope to enlist in their campaign the heads of other corporations whom the president has antagonized through his activity in the correction of abuses in corporation management.

AMERICAN TOPICS.

The Rev. Algernon S. Crapsey, rector of St. Andrew's Protestant Episcopal Church of Rochester, N.Y., who was found guilty of heresy after a trial by an ecclesiastical court at Batavia last month, on June 6th filed an appeal from the findings of the court.

The Mutual Life Insurance Company of New York has brought suit against its former vice-president, Robert A. Granniss, for an accounting of funds of the company which were expended under his direction. Mr. Granniss is alleged to have directed the use of part of the so-called "yellow dog fund." James McKee, counsel for the Mutual Life, said that suits doubtless will be brought against all persons who handled the company's money and who have failed to give an accounting for it.

The National Hardwood Lumber Association at its recent meeting in Memphis adopted a report that presented the dire possibilities of the destruction of the forests in the short period of thirty-five years. It was estimated that there now stood in the United States in the neighborhood of 1,475,000,000,000 feet of lumber, but that 45,000,000,000 feet of lumber was being cut every year. The report recommended the immediate prohibition of log exports and exemption from taxes of tree plantations. Attention was called to the desirability of state legal enactments along the last line, and some constitutional provision by the general government of like effect. Mention was made of the custom prevailing in France of requiring a tree to be planted for every tree cut down.

Mr. Robert Adams, Jr., member of Congress from the second district of Pennsylvania, comprising a part of the city of Philadelphia, committed suicide on June 1st, by shooting himself in his apartments in the Metropolitan Club chambers, Washington. Financial ruin, the fear of the loss of his seat in the house and the dread of a return of a cancerous growth in his throat are causes which led him to take his life. Although once possessed of a fortune estimated at $250,000, it is now believed that he died absolutely penniless. The failure of two concerns in which he was a heavy investor and recent speculation in the stock market wiped out every dollar which he possessed. Thirty-five cents was all the money found to-day among his effects. It was generally known among his intimate associates that he played in stocks, but few knew that he was financially embarrassed.

A small excess of receipts over expenditures for the month of May leaves the United States Treasury with a surplus of over $6,100,000 for the eleven months ending with May. The receipts for the month amounted to $47,980,023, an increase of nearly $2,900,000 as compared with the preceding month and over $4,200,000 as compared with the corresponding month of last year. The expenditures amounted to $45,855,000, a decrease of over $1,200,000 as compared with the preceding month and of over $800,000 as compared with the corresponding month of last year. The receipts for the eleven months amounted to $539,547,633, which was over $44,000,000 in excess of those for the corresponding period of the preceding fiscal year. The expenditures for the eleven months of the current fiscal year amounted to $533,392,045, an increase of a little over $1,100,000 as compared with the corresponding period of the preceding fiscal year. Last year at the end of May there was a deficit of over $36,600,000; at the end of May this year there was a surplus of about one-sixth of that amount.

The importance of the mosquito in spreading malarial diseases is fully recognised. Hence the study of its natural enemies is also of special interest. An article in Chambers' Journal for May draws attention to one of those which appears to keep the mosquito in check. In the Barbadoes many of the waters abound in a small fish known as "millions"—presumably from their great numbers—which feeds on the larvæ of the mosquito. It is said that in the parts where the fish abounds there is immunity from mosquitoes, and that malaria is almost unknown. Experiments are to be tried by introducing the fish into other islands of the West Indies. This plan of introducing a natural enemy has proved successful in a number of cases, and the mosquito-eating fish might be introduced into other districts. If this fish really feeds largely on the larvæ of the mosquito, and if the latter have really become extinct in the district, we have the unusual case of species exterminating its own food supply.

"Twenty-five years ago the United States produced 27,000 tons of copper. The production during 1905 was practically 400,000 tons, or more than half of the world's total supply. The value of last year's output may be given as $160,000,000," says the New York Sun. "The uses of this metal are steadily growing. It is estimated that by 1920 the requirements of the world will reach 1,500,000 tons. The United States will probably hold its present place in the market. New deposits are opened from time to time. There are known districts yet undeveloped in the western mountains, and Alaska is rich in copper. Mexico and Canada are copper countries and send the United States ore and matte for smelting, and pigs, bars and ingots for manufacture. The increasing supply of the metal promises to keep prices within reasonable bounds, while the increasing demand fairly assures ample profits to the owners of copper properties. No available substitute has yet been found for its use for electrical purposes, and the employment of electricity increases from year to year. The day of copper has come, and there is every reason to believe it will be a long day."

In an interesting note the Railroad Employee declares that we are now on the very threshold of a gradual change in the general method of transportation, and that the young man who, with a reasonable amount of preparation, enters this field, will be repaid by more substantial advancement and corresponding rewards than in other vocations. All signs point that way; electricity is the wedge that will demand new methods and new men. Its use will require a modification of the old way which the older men will find difficult to grasp, and yet not a small part of the practical knowledge of railroad work as now conducted will be an absolute essential. It will not do, as in days gone by, to attempt to work from a freight brakeman or track laborer of limited education up to the superintendent's chair, and those who attempt it will find the chairs all taken by those more progressive and better prepared. What is needed is an appreciation of the possibilities with as good a preliminary education as the public schools afford—then a slight technical training which will familiarize the applicant with the general problem, followed by practical experience.

Senator A. P. Gorman, the Democratic leader, who has been ill for five months past, died in Washington, of heart trouble, on June 4. The official sketch of Senator Gorman, which appeared in the last issue of the Congressional Directory, says: "Arthur Pue Gorman was born in Howard County, Md., March 11, 1839; attended the public schools in his native county for a brief period; in 1852 was appointed page in the senate of the United States, and continued in the service of the senate until 1866, at which time he was postmaster; on the 1st of September, 1866, he was removed from his position and immediately appointed collector of internal revenue for the Fifth district of Maryland, which office he held until the incoming of the Grant administration in 1869; in November, 1869, was elected a member of the house of delegates of the Maryland legislature; was reelected in 1871; then elected speaker of the house of delegates at the ensuing session; in June, 1872, he was elected president of the Chesapeake & Ohio Canal Company; in 1875 he was elected to represent Howard county in the Maryland state senate, and was reelected in November, 1879, for a term of four years; was elected in January, 1880, to the United States senate as a Democrat, to succeed William Pinkney Whyte, took his seat March 4, 1881, and was reelected in 1886 and in 1892; in 1902 was again elected to succeed George I. Wellington, Republican, and took his seat March 4, 1903." Winning early a reputation for sagacity and keenness in congressional affairs, he attained prominence not only as a leader in the senate, but in the country at large, and by many men was considered the most available man in his party for presidency. He was chairman of the executive committee and managed the campaign that resulted in the election of Cleveland in 1884. When the Democrats had control of the senate Gorman was the recognized leader of that body. It was at that time that the tariff bill of 1894 was passed and although the Maryland senator was not a member of the finance committee he had so much to do with shaping the matter that his name is often given to it and in fact it is frequently called the Wilson-Gorman tariff.

The British commercial agent in the United States, has made a report on the trade of that country in 1905. The report is full of complimentary references to the growth and expansion of American trade, and the tone is that of kindly approval and pleasure in America's trade advancement. He pays special attention to the export trade, and remarks that if such progress in foreign trade is possible during such bright times at home, it is not difficult to imagine what will be the result when the home demand slackens and when the manufacturers, who have so greatly enlarged their works to meet the extended demand for their products, are obliged to look for markets outside of the United States. The agent discovers no sign of diminishing activity in American workshops, and declares that every indication points to as great prosperity this year as was the case last year. He says that there is an opportunity for British traders to extend their commerce with the United States, but he does not enumerate the articles in which the British may look for increased consumption of their products in this country. He also points to the growing population, which, he says, is increasing at the rate of 1,000,000 a year from immigration alone, as offering a greater market for British goods. The only possibility of a slackening up in this demand, he says, is a crop failure, though he does not see any sign of such a failure.

BABY-FARMING IN JAPAN.

It is reported, says the Kobe Herald, that on Sunday afternoon some children playing beside an old well attached to a house at Nihonbashi, 4-chome, Osaka, belonging to a jinrikisha-man named Hirooka Manzo, saw something which they took to be a dead dog lying in the water. Having learnt of the incident, two policemen proceeded to the well and removed the body, which proved to be that of a baby. The well was then searched, with the result that three bags, each containing the dead body of a baby, were discovered. Suspecting that the wife of the jinrikisha-man, a woman of fifty-four years of age, might be cognisant of the matter, the police at once conducted an investigation at her house. Three babies were found on the premises, two of whom were dying of starvation, while the third was tightly bound in a "futon" and was almost on the point of death. Three bags similar to those in which the dead babies were wrapped were also discovered. The woman confessed that she had been in the habit of taking in babies on payment of from six to seven yen each and that she made a practice of subsequently killing them. It is said that it has already been ascertained that fifty children have been murdered by the woman, and it is believed that the total number of babies killed by her is as many as one hundred.

When questioned, the woman stated that she threw the babies into the well at about 9 or 10 p.m., when a public tap was running, so that the noise was not heard. She said, however, that she killed the infants before putting them into the well by suffocating them in "futon."

According to the lengthy accounts of this terrible affair which are published in the Japanese papers, the woman has been carrying on baby-killing as a regular business for the past ten years. She was assisted by a number of old women, who collected babies from various parts of the country. They generally received about yen 10 from the parents, out of which they deducted yen 2 or yen 3 for themselves.

The rikisha-man and his wife and several women who are believed to have been accomplices are now in custody.

YOKOHAMA DOCK COMPANY, LTD.

The half yearly meeting of shareholders in the Yokohama Dock Co., Ltd., was held on the 28th inst. and a very satisfactory balance sheet was unanimously passed, a dividend of yen 2.50 per share being paid for the half year and considerable sums being added to already large reserve funds. The company is making an extensive wet dock for safely mooring ships alongside quays to facilitate repairs, beside keeping well up to date with tools, and general equipment, and from its location in the harbour its business should continue to increase in value as the trade of the country extends. Appended is the balance sheet.

YACHTING.

Local yachtsmen were favoured with a fresh north-easterly wind on Saturday afternoon. The 39 Raters raced over the Nagahama course, and the preparatory gun found four under way and waiting for the start. Maid Marion did not cross the line, but passed outside the bathing barge, having come down a little too soon. Instead of going about, and returning, her skipper kept her on in the race. Mary crossed close to the bathing barge, on starboard tack. Kingfisher and Riever crossed nearer the schooner, on port tack. When they met, Mary was forced about by Kingfisher to avoid a collision, although she had the right of way. After Mary's helm had been put down, Kingfisher luffed a bit, but far too late to avoid a smash if Mary had kept on as she had every right to do. Kingfisher then kept on the port tack sailing through Mary's weather. On reaching the breakwater, both went about again to starboard tack, heading towards the Harbour Entrance. Kingfisher was then sailed along a good full, whereas Mary held closer to the wind, and when they met again at the entrance, Mary secured the weather berth, and a lead of about 15 seconds. Reaching out to the Lightship there was little between them, but after rounding the Widow buoy, and setting spinnakers, Mary drew away a bit, and turned the buoy at Nagahama with a minute or so to the good. On the beat back, against a nasty joggle of sea, Mary made much better weather of it, and began to draw away from the bigger boat, eventually crossing the line about 9 minutes ahead. Maid Marion gave the Riever a bad beating, and did a great deal better than might be expected under conditions of wind and sea that are unsuited to her style.

Official times were:—

	Start.	Finish.	Handicap.	Corrected.
Mary ....	2.0.24	4.32.44	scratch	4.32.44
Kingfisher ..	2.0.22	4.41.46	do	4.41.46
Riever ...	2.0.18	5.19.49	40 mins.	5.39.49

Mary wins the Mumm Champagne Cup. Maid Marion was timed to finish at 4.56.38, and on her handicap could have spared a couple of minutes to return and cross the line properly.

Six boats of the Lark Class started, but on getting outside could not find the buoy off Tachibana, which seems to have been removed during the week. The Mosquito Yacht Club race brought out four boats, which under single reefs had a close race round the course, Pete finishing first.

CORRESPONDENCE.

THE SERVANT QUESTION.

(TO THE EDITOR OF THE "JAPAN MAIL.")

SIR,—It is with the greatest interest I have read the letters in the Japan Mail upon the servant question, but it surprises me that so few people have taken the matter up, when this good opportunity arises. I personally could number a good many residents in Tokyo who would thoroughly agree with your correspondents of the 13th and 19th insts.

There is no doubt that if the existing state of affairs is allowed to continue it must mean that the servant problem in Japan will become infinitely worse than either in America or England, for in those countries although the servant classes are difficult enough to deal with, we do at least know within a little what our daily expenses will be, as all commodities are marked at a fixed price, whilst here in Japan, the purchasing is done through the servants and you must pay what they ask and consider yourself lucky that you are allowed to be squeezed in the process.

If you look into things too thoroughly and remark perhaps that the price of chickens is high you know perfectly well that chickens next week will be lower, whilst fish will have taken an upward turn; and so for one's own peace of mind you have to be philosophic and pay more or else change your servants frequently. The question is, would any Japanese be subject to this if residing abroad?

It seems to be an arranged plan that the foreigner must be charged considerably higher for every non-imported article he buys than the Japanese would dream of paying! Surely the advantage of our residence in this country is not entirely one-sided and does not warrant our being squeezed in a wholesale way, extending en passant far outside the sphere of the servant question.

The increased tariff coming into force on the first of October will be a very serious matter for many residents whose incomes are not high; in fact, this, together with the uncontrolled squeezing, will make it almost impossible to live here.

During my few years residence in Japan I have been able to keep the same amahs I had when I commenced housekeeping, with the exception of two months which will ever be remembered as a nightmare; and I was glad to have the original amahs back, although one lives as it were on a precipice all the time knowing that if you don't do more or less as they want, then they will leave you. Wages have risen considerably in the last 3 years: 9 or 10 yen was considered good pay for a house amah, but they now tell you that you are paying about as little as it is possible to pay, namely 11 yen a month, and so you go on wondering where this is all going to end. One would not mind paying considerably higher than this, as a good servant is always worthy of her hire, but the more you increase their wages, assist them monetarily during illness, or that of their relations, or indulge in any additional luxury yourself, they immediately consider that you are advancing in prosperity and therefore a fit subject for an additional squeeze.

After all that is written above there are those who may say one must not forget that individually the Japanese servant is considerably cheaper than a European one, but in return it must not be forgotten that for the amount of work done, a greater number of Japanese servants have to be employed as compared with the European domestics; also some say that the accommodation provided for Japanese servants in foreign households is not the same as that provided for European domestics. I think I can say that almost invariably the accommodation in European houses is certainly equal to any they obtain in a Japanese one.

In addition to this, the treatment meted out to them in any well managed household if they are good servants, is all that can be desired, and in fact we put up with many things in the way of behaviour that we should not tolerate from our servants at home, nor would it be stood for one instant in a Japanese household, and it is becoming common knowledge that all the better class Japanese are remarking upon the bad tone of the Japanese servants in European households.

If one tries to correct these difficulties by a rather too diligent search for a suitable servant you are at once marked as Mudzukashii. I have never been able to quite understand what Mudzukashii in their idea means, unless it is one's struggles to keep within one's household allowance, and be called "mean," and to keep one's house tidy, and clean and have some control over its management.

Trusting, I am not encroaching too much on your space, I am dear sir, yours faithfully,

"A JUST COMPLAINANT."

June 20th, 1906.

(TO THE EDITOR OF THE "JAPAN MAIL.")

SIR,—I have been much surprised to observe that the experiences with Japanese servants of "Householder," others, and myself do not appear to be entirely general with the community, but it is difficult to understand how the charge of very bad taste can be directed against the conduct of the discussion, unless "Domestic's" accusation is intended for those of your correspondents who openly doubt the veracity of other people's assertions, meet their avowals of consistent kindness and justice to their domestics with such information as that servants are not to be treated like dogs and slaves, and in connection with such behaviour as that described in my letter, bring forward the question of provocation. That the subject discussed is not one that should be addressed to the public at large is as unaccountable a statement as that other, which has more than once been expressed, that the whole remedy of the difficulty—a gang or ring notoriously designed to control the conduct of servants and bind down the Foreign Employers to its seditious influence—lies in the householder's hands. If the consensus of opinion should prove such views as these to be identical with those of the majority of residents, which I very much doubt, there is nothing for "Householder," and those of a like mind, but to abandon their efforts for their own and the public good, and for myself but to rest satisfied with having publicly annulled the value of a recommendation, by which I should desire nobody to be misled.

Yours faithfully, R. HARGREAVES.

Yokohama, June 22nd, 1906.

(TO THE EDITOR OF THE "JAPAN MAIL.")

SIR,—Pardon me for again trespassing on your space.

I am exceedingly sorry to see that this discussion re domestics continues and to find that there are so many sufferers in our midst. Amongst a tolerably large acquaintance I have not met any of them.

I consider such a discussion is in exceedingly bad taste. The Japanese do not ask us to come here and do not need us. Besides which they do not refuse us the protection which any civilized nation extends to those settled in their midst. Then is it not, to say the least, bad form to discuss them in our own press as if they were a parcel of savages. Supposing a number of foreigners settled in any French or German city could or would they do the same there under the same provocation? In England and America they cannot legislate to remove the servant grievance which is greatly on the increase and much worse than here.

I am quite sure that in any European country, if the servants were given the same power they have here in marketing, they would squeeze at a far higher rate.

No, if we cast our lot here, and most of us do it from entirely selfish motives, we must make the best of it, or return to that paradise from whence we came.

I fear if this discussion is carried too far those most vitally interested will find themselves boycotted and be obliged to retire from the scene.

It would be interesting to learn from what peaceful, happy land these gentlemen, who have been so unfortunate here, hail. All of us would be glad to find that elysium where domestic worries are unknown.

Apologising for troubling you this once more.

I am, yours truly, HOUSE-WIFE.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "JAPAN MAIL."

SIR,—Kindly allow me space in your paper to reply to the courteous letter signed "R. Hargreaves." In my previous letter when I made use of the words "bad taste" I had in view those correspondents, who, according to their own showing, are without a grievance, but who yet enter the lists. I take it that the public at large do not wish to hear of their happy state, but to hear of some practical method whereby the servant grievance can be remedied.

However, after all the correspondence that has ensued the main point has been overlooked, that is the question of boycotting! It happens occasionally, that a servant is comfortable in service, and wishes to remain, and the employer thinks that at last all is going well. Then a day comes when the servant is sick, or a relation is sick, and from that date your servant has finished with you! In a day or two you have an application from a cook or amah, as the case may be, and you have to put up with the substitute. You may hear later on that the reason your former servant left was owing to a "friend" wishing to have the place. How often has an employer said to a servant, either cook or amah, "If you wish to leave my employ you can do so, but don't leave in such a manner that you try your best to cause me needless inconvenience." I was taking to a friend the other day about this question of servants leaving "at once" if they thought there was a chance of causing the employer inconvenience, also the question of charging excessively for goods purchased, and he told me that servants could be punished for these acts in his country. Again, I think, that there is a scarcity of domestic servants. Some time ago I noticed a suggestion in a home paper that parents should urge their sons and daughters to go in for domestic service in place of over-crowding the ranks of the poorly paid clerks and some such system obtains here where the ranks of clerks and office boys, and typewriter girls, are increasing out of all proportion to the needs of the business of the city.

I consider the public should be very grateful to those large-hearted persons who are trying to solve this vexed domestic service question in a fair and honest manner, but I have my doubts of their being successful here. There may be other countries where a man or woman can enter your service with a forged character, or with some tale of being employed by some obscure or imaginary individual, and also of leaving with or without cause, and without warning, and also doing their best to try and stop other servants from entering your employ! The question of language is immaterial. I know some employers who speak the language fairly, and have trouble with their servants, and other families, who, rich enough to keep 2 or 3 servants—do not, but keep one and do household work themselves,—to save trouble and needless gossiping of the other servants. In fact the whole domestic servant question out here is "rotten to the core" with from what I can see no redress or penalty, and the servants very insulting and trying in their ways.

Yours truly, DOMESTIC.

(TO THE EDITOR OF THE "JAPAN MAIL.")

Permit me to say a final word on the above subject in reply to the letter of "Bachelor" in your issue of the 20th instant.

"Bachelor" is satisfied with the servant he has had for 3 years and says that it is very probable there are bad characters amongst the servants, but that there are also good characters and in his opinion the good ones "predominate in Japan and it is a very simple matter to procure them when looking for servants." If "Bachelor" has a large circle of friends, some of whom go away occasionally, he can easily arrange for a transfer of their good servants to him. But if just when he wants a servant he happens not to be able to get such a transfer, and therefore has to go into the market, so to speak, to find one, he might first have to try a few dozens before he gets a fairly good one or not find any.

The missionaries generally succeed in obtaining fairly good and faithful servants, because (I am informed) as a rule they obtain them in the interior when they go there, where there is no foreigner's house for them to shift and go to and no evil companions to teach them how to squeeze and deceive the foreigner. Thus a degree of satisfaction is given, pleasant relations grow up between employer and servant and are continued even after the missionary moves to the treaty port, and when he leaves Japan he generally transfers his servants to another and by this system, they generally speaking, experience little trouble with their servants.

As "Bachelor" says that it is easy to get good servants, I would ask him to explain publicly how they are to be obtained in the treaty ports and in Tokyo, and if he prefer that, I would esteem it a favour if he would kindly give his name and address so that I might communicate with him privately, as many persons I know are now seeking a moderately trustworthy, capable, honest and clean servant. He considers that an employer who treats his servants like human beings will be able to retain them. Well, we are prepared to mete out to ours the fullest consideration and kindness. But to the majority of servants kindness and consideration are poor inducements to remain long in one employ compared with opportunity to do as they please, to neglect everything possible, to squeeze and live on the employer's goods. Some cooks actually refuse situations in houses where the mistress makes the purchases herself. The reason is obvious. This we have found by experience and from information obtained from others.

Let me assure "Bachelor" honestly for myself and others that the position with regard to house management has become very acute and unbearable in houses where reasonable discipline, cleanliness, order and honesty are expected and after enquiries one is driven to the conclusion that a great deal of laxity is permitted in houses on account of a fear of the employers dismissing the bad one and getting a worse. It would perhaps be unfair to say that some housekeepers may be paying more attention to the rules of bridge than to the proper regulation of the servants' behaviour; but housekeepers may well be urged to follow the methods adopted by "Housewife" as set forth in her letter in your issue of the 12th instant.

Finally, permit me to suggest to Mr. R. Hargreaves that he having experienced the evils of the present condition of things, should put aside all consideration as to whether or not he has any influence among the Yokohama community, sacrifice a little time and money and make a move towards securing co-operation for the establishment of a householders' union in Yokohama. It would not hurt him if he fail. I myself, an humble unit in Tokyo, am trying to do the same. Although the necessity for such an organization may be generally admitted, yet each one will wait upon the others to take the initiative. Every community has its portion of those who are unwilling to do anything for the general good, but nevertheless are quite eager to criticise unkindly when others put themselves to some trouble in that behalf. But such need not be considered at all.

I am, Sir, etc., HOUSEHOLDER.

Tokyo, 23rd June, 1906.

(TO THE EDITOR OF THE "JAPAN MAIL.")

SIR,—I am delighted to find amongst the many who have written upon this subject, a view of it in a "Housewife's" letter in this morning Mail expressed in almost the identical words I have used over and over again whenever the question of Japanese servants has been brought up by the foreign residents of Yokohama.

History is for ever repeating itself, and when I arrived here more than sixteen years ago, it was even then the usual custom of the givers of afternoon teas (Bridge then not having become the craze) to entertain their guests with instances of the many delinquencies of their cooks, house boys, and amahs. Of how the cook nefariously made as much as 5 sen (more or less) on the daily marketing—how the house boy took a squeeze of 3 sen a month on the "flower-seller, and how the children's amah cut a piece off a stale loaf to take home to her own family, three or more of whom she had to keep on a then average wage of 6 or 7 yen a month. To these melancholy tales I invariably replied in the words of "Housewife," that they had lived too long in Japan, and had better return to the countries whence they came, and see what domestics could do there, for that they had evidently forgotten—that is, if they had ever been in a position to know how to keep a servant at all before coming to the Far East, which I knew in many cases was extremely problematical. Japan is not a prison, and surely her people are not just now so enamoured of foreigners as to keep them here against their will.

In the course of a 16 years' experience of Japanese servants mine has averaged as follows: two house-boys 7 years each; a jinrikisha coolie 9 years—another 4 years; a female cook 4½ years—with three others who proving inefficient were discharged after a fair trial of a year each, more or less;—and I can safely say that during the whole of that time I never had lock or key on eatables, money, clothes, or jewellery and never, but in one solitary instance, was anything missing, and that I justly attributed to my own carelessness in leaving temptation in the way of a young and rather wild "boy" who remained but a short time in my service.

Therefore let me add my personal testimony to that of others in favour of the much abused Japanese servant, who, if he has his fault, (and who amongst us would be perfect if placed in the same position?) is at any rate no worse than his average confreres in other countries.

Enclosing my card, I am, Sir, FAIR-PLAY.
June 27th.

PICKPOCKETS.

(TO THE EDITOR OF THE "JAPAN MAIL.")

SIR,—Is there any country in the world with a better record in pickpocketing than Japan? It would be very interesting to know the opinion of as many Foreigners as possible about this question.

There are not many friends of mine who can claim not to have been robbed by a pickpocket at least once during their sojourn in Japan. I, myself had twice the pleasure to punish on the spot those "Longfingers," as we call them in Germany, who tried to cause my money to go with them.

This time I recovered it, but on two other occasions I was robbed successfully. Some time ago I returned with the last train from Yokohama to Tokyo and was with only two persons in a second class compartment. The following morning I found, that I had been robbed for the fifth time. It is a little too much in two years.

A friend of mine had his breeches-pocket cut open and his purse taken out with nearly 25 yen. To his great surprise he got exactly 25 yen back from the police authorities. He, himself, did not know the exact amount, but he knew, it was a little less than 25 yen. Is it not curious?

The Japanese don't like to prosecute pickpockets, because they fear their hatred. I even could not induce any one to help me in arresting a pickpocket in the Ginza, though I called him loudly in Japanese a thief and though several persons in the electric car had seen that he took my purse out of my pocket, and though I gave him a blow in the face.

Thanking you in advance for your kindness in inserting the above, I remain yours,

Very truly, FOREIGNER.

CRUELTY TO ANIMALS.

(TO THE EDITOR OF THE "JAPAN MAIL.")

SIR,—It is very interesting to see the Japanese agitating improvements of all kinds. In Yokohama they now have a regular organized society for the prevention of cruelty to animals. The Kobe Herald reports that a policeman in that city recently stopped a driver who was beating his pony unmercifully because he could not draw a load of 3200 pounds of nails, and made him take off a part of the load. Doubtless more policemen like that one are needed.

But I write this on behalf of another kind of animal, but not a brute, who is being cruelly treated all over this beautiful land. I mean the crazy, the demented people, who are found in every community. They are left to wander about the streets or when very severe are confined in specially prepared cages in some corner of their homes. One day a few years ago I saw a perfectly nude crazy man walking down a crowded street and the people laughing at him. A few days ago a demented young man, a former pupil of mine, came walking right into my bed room early in the morning while I was dressing. He is a complete mental wreck and wanders about the streets alone every day. He started with ordinary nobyō, the head trouble so common among students of Japan. I believe that even now if he could be sent to a good insane asylum or sanatorium such as they have in every state in America, he could be cured. But as it is he will go on suffering, a burden to his people, and an object of pity to all who see him wandering about filthy and helpless. It seems an unpardonable cruelty to the person himself and to the community at large to allow such a condition of things in this progressive age. I would like to recommend to the Committee in Tokyo that has been organized to build a great hotel to accommodate foreign visitors, that they employ their energies and money in erecting a great modern asylum or sanatorium where proper care and medical treatment can be given to the thousands of their fellow-countrymen who have lost their minds and are either wandering about the streets or confined in cages in private homes. This would be more sensible and humanitarian. It would save in many cases a useful life to the country and save a life-long burden to many a poor family. Foreigners will have a good time in this country whether there is a great modern hotel or not, but the proper care of the mentally deranged young people of the nation is or ought to be a very vital question.

Yours truly,

WILL PATILLO.

MEDITATIONS ON MR. YANO'S DEATH.

(TO THE EDITOR OF THE "JAPAN MAIL.")

SIR,—The greatness of the Japanese lies, no doubt, in their preference for honour rather than for riches or life itself. Even the so-called failures at Portsmouth reflected in no small degree our intrinsic worth, yet this greatness has often betrayed us into blunders. Are we not too apt to mistake fame for honour? Do we not often drop and lose the substance in trying to catch its shadows? Thus variety has become part and parcel of this aspiring nation. Merchants whose sole object should be in accumulating and distributing wealth and merchandise for the welfare of both individuals and nations (wherein lies their true greatness) are very often vain enough to crave for ranks and decorations. Even the students in commercial schools must have the title of Shogyo Gakushi!

In the face of these facts, the death of such a man as Mr. Yano Jiro is indeed a heavy loss to the nation. It is true that I knew him but little; but the little that I knew of him makes me feel great sorrow for his departure. He was a man in whom the chivalrous Samurai and the sagacious Chōnin were happily combined. A prodigy born of the old Japan and the new! No man, whom I know of, was shrewder and more practical than he, yet he had a large, generous heart which always beat for others' welfare. I have known him to take his pupils to the tailor's and have new suits made at his own cost. Mr. K. A., an old acquaintance of mine, once had the gratification of being so treated, as he was leaving for a certain firm to which he had been recommended by him. In short, Mr. Yano was the typical master of a commercial school, and Japan needs now, more than ever, such masters. But alas! he is gone—gone forever! Shall we ever look upon his like again?

It was more than twenty years ago that he examined me in English, when I presented myself as a candidate for a position in the Tokio Higher Commercial School, which I believe had just then been started. The examination continued for three days, and each day I was invited to dinner. On the first day we debated in English for nearly three hours, the topic being our civilization. There I beat him completely. On the second day, he wanted me to write my rieki (curriculum vitae) in English. But I objected on the ground that foreigners seldom give their rieki, and told him as I was examined in a foreign language, I had better not do any thing contrary to their usual custom. The impudence of a giddy youth! Yet Mr. Yano, though naturally quick-tempered, had magnanimity enough to bear it all. But the third day was my Seikigakura, and I lost everything. As I was translating his English letters, I read 20 per cent for what he meant to be 2 per cent; and I could not make out what he meant by Enoshima. Those letters were written in such a hand as Horace Greeley might well be proud of! Besides, it is a fact that I knew then nothing about Enoshima. Mr. Yano being displeased with my ignorance, told me that a lad who knew nothing about Enoshima, and fancied that such a high rate of interest as 20 per cent could be tolerated in business would never make a good merchant; hence it would not do for him to be teaching in a commercial school. "But," he added, "You're a pretty good scholar. Come and see me. I'll recommend you to another school." I declined to accept his kind offer, as I was hurt by his remark. And here I am teaching in a commercial school. After an experience of twenty years I find myself still unfit for the situation! What a wonderful insight Mr. Yano had! It is no wonder that all those pupils of his whom he had recommended to various merchants and firms, including Mr. A., an old acquaintance of mine, are making a figure in the world's eye. Japan's future prosperity, no less than her true greatness, owes much to his past services. May his soul rest in peace and undisturbed bliss, for it is not I alone who would join in his praise!

Yamaguchi, 20th 1906.

ENGLISH SAILORS IN JAPAN.

(TO THE EDITOR OF THE "JAPAN MAIL.")

SIR,—In connection with the approaching visit of the British Squadron and its entertainment by the Municipality of Tokyo, I would like to offer a few suggestions. In the first place I would suggest either that geisha or other women be not engaged; or that the men be given very plainly to understand by their officers that the "Arry and Arriet" style of demonstrating affection in public is highly offensive to Japanese women.

On the occasion of the last entertainment in Tokyo, a group of the men was even photographed with their arms around the women waitresses, and anyone who witnessed it must have seen how thoroughly ashamed the women were. I have heard the women express in the strongest terms their dislike for these demonstrations and anyone at all acquainted with Japanese women must know how acutely distressing such things are. It is true that they endure it and even attempt to make light of it; but it is only out of fear of appearing inhospitable that such sacrifices are made.

But is there any reason why the sensibilities of women should be outraged in this manner? Can there be any excuse for hurting the feelings, or violating the usages of a country merely to provide entertainment for guests?

If a party of men from a certain country were entertained in England and they were to insist upon rubbing noses with English women, would it be merely attributed to playfulness and tolerated as a kind of joke?

When the Japanese crews went to England to receive the Katori and Kashima they were carefully instructed so as not to violate any usage in England. All papers unite in saying that they behaved like gentlemen; that they were invariably temperate and that they gave offence to no one—much less women. It is to be hoped that the British sailors will not be behindhand in any of these respects. And lest whether inadvertently or through ignorance of the customs of the country they should be behindhand in one of these respects, I take the liberty of bringing this matter before the attention of those whom it may concern.

Yours respectfully,

A BRITISHER.

THE FUTURE OF WEI-HAI-WEI.

(TO THE EDITOR OF THE "JAPAN MAIL.")

SIR,—Rumours concerning the future of Wei-hai-wei have been in circulation for some time, and latterly even details purporting to be the terms on which H. M. Government is prepared to hand over the Territory have been published. These rumours are apparently from Chinese sources and have generally appeared first in the native press. It would appear that they obtain considerable credence with foreigners; and this, too, in spite of official statements to the contrary.

Mr. Runciman, replying on behalf of the Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs to a question in the House of Commons, said: "It is not considered that the transfer of the Russian lease of Port Arthur to Japan has made any change in the present status of Wei-hai-wei, which is leased to His Majesty's Government, and no action is at present contemplated with regard to the lease." The Times, February 22, 1906.

To ordinary people accustomed to plain English this public declaration of the Government's position in regard to the question would seem to indicate that Great Britain intends to retain possession of Wei-hai-wei till the present lease terminates, i.e., for 17 years,—if not longer.

His Honour, the Commissioner of Wei-hai-wei, and others in a position to know the real facts, have also been approached on the subject, and the writer has received the Commissioner's permission to state positively that the question of the rendition of Wei-hai-wei to China has not arisen, and that statements on the point, which have been so persistent of late in the press, are entirely unfounded.

His Honour, the Commissioner, recently went, via Tsingtau, to the provincial capital. According to the reports published in the European press from Tientsin to Hongkong, there was a two-fold object in this journey, (1) to arrange for the rendition of Wei-hai-wei, (2) to conclude negotiations about an important railway concession. His Honour authorises me to state that both these reports are absolutely untrue, and that he undertook the journey merely in order to pay friendly visits to the Governor of Tsingtau and to the Governor of Shantung, the latter of whom visited the Commissioner at Wei-hai-wei last summer.

It is satisfactory to be able to contradict so emphatically the extraordinary and damaging reports that have been current regarding the political future of England's newest Eastern possession.

Yours faithfully,

HERBERT L. BEER.

CONCERT IN SENDAI.

(COMMUNICATED.)

On Saturday evening, June 16th, the Sendai United Orchestra under the able direction of the Rev. J.

Monroe Stick, gave a musical treat to a very appreciative audience in the Chapel of North Japan College. The orchestra exhibited a very marked improvement over all previous performances, the result of Mr. Stick's conscientious and most thorough training, and showed itself entirely adequate to all the intricacies of orchestral work. The volume of tone was at all times very good, and the shadings were excellent. Sendai should be and is honored in having in its midst a man with such musical ability and Mr. Stick deserves unstinted praise for having trained some thirty-five Japanese musicians to play so beautifully together. A vocal solo by Mr. Giichi Jo, was well rendered and this young man has a good baritone voice. The selection composed by Mrs. William G. Seiple and rendered for the first time by Mr. Jo was certainly praiseworthy. The male quartette composed of Revs. Smith, Davison, Stick and Iglehart, sang beautifully. Their voices blended well and their selections were well chosen; the encores received were a sure sign that their work was greatly appreciated by the audience. Mr. H. P. Armstrong, of Yokohama, proved himself a fine performer on the violin and viola. His selections were faultlessly rendered and the tones were pure, sweet and artistic. He is a young violinist of great promise.

The citizens of Sendai have become accustomed to hearing Mr. Stick play cornet solos and he may be heard at almost every social function, and yet at this concert he eclipsed all other performances. He rendered Rossini's "Cujus Animam" from the "Stabat Mater" with such sweetness and purity of tone that persons in the audience remarked that the effect was like a violin. Only a few days ago he received a fine new gold cornet which he used and perhaps this instrument has a sweeter tone than Mr. Stick's old cornet, at any rate we wish to state that Mr. Stick is, without doubt, the ablest and most artistic cornetist in Japan to-day. He is an artist on the cornet, as well as an able teacher of music and band director. The Nibancho Church Choir, composed of Japanese, sang with good taste and remarkable skill. They showed thoroughness but lacked in harmony and unity. They rendered their selection well. All who heard Rev. F. H. Smith sing his beautiful bass solos and his singing with the male quartette recognized in him the artist. Mr. Smith has a wonderful bass voice; with clear enunciation and remarkable flexibility, he filled the hall with tones and sounds high, deep and low down, eliciting great admiration and deserved applause.

The instrumental trio for violin, violoncello, and piano was by all odds the best and finest music produced on any Sendai stage hitherto. All three performers, Messrs Armstrong, Salinger and Mrs. Seiple played together with skill and precision such as has never before been heard in this city. It was a rare treat to hear such good music and we hope it may be arranged to have this trio next season. The soprano solo by Mrs. Wm. G. Seiple was artistically rendered, her voice showed training and she sang the high notes sweetly. She possesses a good range, character and a charming tone and left a very good impression upon her audience. Mrs. Seiple proved herself an able and untiring accompanist, as she played for almost all the soloists of the evening. The mixed quartet sang nicely; however, their voices did not blend very well, some sang too strongly for the others and more practice and singing in a more subdued manner would have improved their efforts.

The violoncello solos by Mr. E. Salinger, a prominent Yokohama musician, provoked the greatest applause. He played with feeling, tact and masterly skill. His first selection was perhaps the finest number on the program if applause and general appreciation by the audience is a fair judge. His appearance in Sendai at some future concert is very much desired.

The concert as a whole was very fine, all who took part acquitted themselves like artists. Much praise is due to Mr. Stick in getting up this excellent concert for the benefit of the Sendai Y.M.C.A.

LADY MARY HAMILTON WEDS.

London, June 15.

The marriage of Lady Mary Hamilton to James, Marquis of Graham, has been solemnized in London. Lady Mary Hamilton is the only daughter of the late twelfth Duke of Hamilton and Brandon and is reputed to be the richest heiress in the United Kingdom. The Marquis of Graham is the eldest son and heir of the fifth Duke of Montrose and he is also said to be very wealthy. Lady Hamilton has but recently passed her majority. The Marquis of Graham is twenty-eight years of age.

Both come from the oldest families in England and Scotland. The Duchy of Hamilton is the premier peerage of Scotland and the Duchy of Brandon is a very old one in England. The Duchy of Montrose, in Scotland, is also a very old one.

TELEGRAMS.

(REUTER'S SPECIAL SERVICE.)

MARRIAGE WITH A DECEASED WIFE'S SISTER.

London, June 21.

The House of Lords has passed the Colonial Marriages Bill.

THE BIELOSTOK HORROR.

Jewish accounts of the affair at Bielowstok give gruesome details of the mutilations that took place. They say that only the arrival of the Duma delegation caused a cessation of the affair.

The Standard understands that Sir Edward Grey has telegraphed to Sir A. Nicholson, asking for full information as to the Bielowstok massacre.

THE "MONTAGU."

It is proposed to tow the floating dock from Bermuda in order to temporarily repair the battleship Montagu if she can be floated.

THE EDUCATION BILL.

Mr. Augustine Birrell has announced that he is prepared to allow special religious instruction in transferred voluntary schools twice weekly, during instead of outside school hours. Mr. Balfour thanked him for this important concession. Many Radicals vehemently protested, declaring that the Government was abandoning the principle of the bill and straining the loyalty of its followers.

FIGHTING THE ZULUS.

London, June 21.

Sixty troopers from Mapumulo fought and dispersed five hundred Zulus, killing sixty.

GREAT BRITAIN AND GERMANY.

A party of German editors have arrived in London in connection with the Anglo-German entente movement.

THE EDUCATION BILL.

Clauses II. and III. of the Education Bill have been adopted after applying the closure.

THE COMMAND IN INDIA.

Later.

The Standard understands that General Sir John French will succeed Lord Kitchener as Commander-in-chief in India in 1907.

THE JEWISH MASSACRES.

The delegates from the Duma after vigorously enquiring into the Bielowstok massacres have arrived at the conclusion that it is the duty of the Duma to detect and punish the authors.

BIELOSTOK.

London, June 22.

President Roosevelt has informed the New York Jews that intervention on his part would only be harmful.

MUTINY.

There have been mutinous outbreaks of troops in many cities. At Sevastopol the garrison mutinied, seizing three guns. Subsequently they were surrounded and disarmed. At Odessa the fleet mutinied and bombarded the city. The Black Sea shipping trade is already demoralised, being hopelessly disorganised by the strikes. The disaffection in Kronstadt has developed into open insubordination.

ROWDY FEMALE SUFFRAGISTS.

London, June 22.

A band of female suffragists besieged Mr. Asquith's house this morning. Four of the leaders were arrested; Miss Billington was fined ten pounds, or two months' imprisonment, for assaulting a policeman; she refused to pay.

PANAMA CANAL.

In Washington the Senate has approved the decision of making a lock system in preference to a sea-level one in constructing the Panama Canal. The question has thus been settled.

SCENES IN THE DUMA.

Later.

In the Duma the Ministers of Justice and of the Interior made speeches defending the conduct of the police; they were howled down with execrations and shouts of "murderers," "massacre-mongers" and "resign."

A deputy, Prince Uruseff, ex-assistant of the Minister of the Interior, created a sensation in the Duma by revealing the fact that an inflammatory proclamation had been printed in a Government department.

AMERICAN SYMPATHY WITH THE JEWS.

London, June 23.

It is reported from Washington that the Senate has passed a resolution to the effect that the people of the United States are horrified by the massacres of Jews in Russia and that they extend their hearty sympathy to the bereaved.

THE DUMA.

The Duma has passed a resolution by a great majority demanding the resignation of the Ministry and the formation of a Government responsible to the Duma.

THE NORWEGIAN CORONATION.

King Haakon and Queen Maud were crowned in Trondhjem Cathedral in accordance with the imposing ancient ceremonial.

CONVENTION.

The Sultan of Morocco has signed the Algeiras Convention.

BRITISH HEAVY ARTILLERY.

The new heavy artillery equipment at Aldershot comprises three batteries of 5-in. 60-pdr. quickfiring field guns with a range of 8½ miles and weighing 5½ tons.

PUNISHED FOR REBATES.

It is reported from Kansas that four meat-packing companies and the Burlington Railroad have been heavily fined for accepting and giving rebates. Two brokers have been imprisoned. At Washington the Attorney-General has announced that it is the intention to prosecute the Standard Oil Trust.

DEATH OF A SPANISH GRANDEE.

London, June 24.

The death is reported of the Duke of Almodovar, the Spanish Minister for Foreign Affairs and the President of the late Morocco conference.

A TERRIBLE DEATH LIST.

A police officer was shot dead in Warsaw yesterday, making the one hundred and twentieth victim of the Terrorists among the police since January, 1905.

FIGHTING IN THE SOUDAN.

London, June 25.

Major O'Connell with 350 of the Camel Corps and 200 of the Soudanese regiment, marching under torrential rains and in seas of mud, and crossing raging torrents, relieved on the 14th of June the garrison of Talodi which had been attacked by Arabs. Major O'Connell then delivered a general attack. The fighting lasted till sunset when 350 of the enemy had been killed and a hundred captured. There were no British casualties.

THE DUMA.

London, June 25.

A member of the Russian Government has published a remarkable statement in the London Daily Telegraph in which he says that the present Duma can not live, and that the Government must enlist as colleagues staid men of the soil in order to succeed in its arduous task. The Social Democrats in the Duma have decided to send members of the Duma to places from which rumours of impending massacres have been received, in order to tranquillize the population.

LIBERALS CELEBRATE AT MANCHESTER.

Later.

A Liberal demonstration, participated in by 30,000 persons, has been held in Manchester to celebrate the triumph of the party in the elections. Mr. John Burns, in the course of a speech, said he wondered that the Government had done so well, especially with regard to the colonies. Mr. Lloyd George said democracy was now on its trial and its success depended on the more advanced members agreeing with the moderates. Mr. Winston Churchill said no one but a fool or an opponent could have expected the Government to set the world right in a few months of office.

DUMA AGAIN ATTACKS GOVERNMENT.

London, June 26.

Another stormy meeting of the Duma has been held at which the deputies, amid thunders of cheering, declared that the Government was corrupt, and that it impoverished the people, putting into its own pockets money given for the famine-stricken. The Minister of the Interior admitted that the struggle with the famine was serious but refused to reply to the accusations against the Government. There were hisses and cries of "Resign," "Don't insult the Duma."

TRAMCAR WRECK IN LONDON.

An electric tramcar rushed down Archway Road in Highgate, and wrecked a hearse, a motorbus, a cab, a van, several shops and another tramcar, leaving half-a-mile of debris in its track. Many passengers jumped off panic-stricken. Altogether three were killed and twenty-one injured.

DISAFFECTION IN RUSSIA.

Later.

The revolutionary propaganda is progressing in the Russian army. The Guards regiments in St. Petersburg and at Tsarskoe-selo are affected. Many arrests have been made. There has been a revolt of the garrison at Batoum and Cossacks are surrounding the mutineers. The inhabitants are in a state of panic.

THE TROUBLE IN NATAL.

Later.

It is reported from Greytown that the natives around Insuji and Noodsbern police stations have rebelled and occupied the former place.

THE BRITISH EDUCATION BILL.

The debate over clause 4 of the Education Bill developed strong opposition on all sides, including some Ministerialists. Liberal papers admit that there is Liberal perplexity and say the Ministerial line wavered almost or the first time this session.

THE ANGLO-GERMAN ENTENTE.

London, June 27.

The Lord Mayor has given a luncheon at the Mansion House to the German editors now visiting England.

Dr. Barth, a member of the Reichstag, emphasized the consequences of a war between Great Britain and Germany. He said that neither Power would be a penny the better; that the whole of Europe would suffer enormous losses, and that it would end in America becoming the leader of the world.

THE NEW YORK TRAGEDY.

London, June 27.
An immense sensation has been created in New York by the New York millionaire Harry Shaw firing at and killing the eminent and wealthy architect, Stanford White, at the Madison Square Garden Theatre. The tragedy is ascribed to jealousy. Shaw had lately married a beautiful chorus girl whom White had previously known. Shaw and his wife have been arrested.

THE EDUCATION BILL.

An important Opposition amendment on clause 4 of the Education Bill, making the clause mandatory, was rejected by 340 to 237 amid prolonged Opposition cheers.

THE NATAL REBELLION.

Later.
The rebels in Natal have been largely reinforced, the impis in the Mapumulo district now numbering 2500.

THE DIVISION ON THE EDUCATION BILL.

The minority in yesterday's division on Clause 4 of the Education Bill included 70 Nationalists, 27 Liberals, and 19 Labourites. The Liberals consider the passage of the bill as now assured, but the Conservatives urge the Government to abandon the measure, which they say, has now become a hopeless jumble.

THE TANAH AFFAIR.

London, June 28.
Four of the Egyptian villagers who fatally assaulted some British officers at Tanah in Egypt, have been sentenced to death; four to penal servitude for life; twelve to various terms; while a number will receive 50 lashes. The latter sentences will be carried out where the assaults were committed.

SEVERE EARTHQUAKE IN WALES.

A severe earthquake has occurred in South Wales. The houses rocked and the inhabitants were panic-stricken. At Swansea, Newport, Cardiff, and neighbouring villages chimney stacks fell in all directions. Many people were injured. Serious damage was done to property.

[BY SPECIAL ARRANGEMENT WITH THE "JAPAN ADVERTISER."]

DUMA COMMISSION.

San Francisco, June 22.
The three delegates sent by the Duma as a Commission to investigate the Bialystok massacre of Jews, have returned to St. Petersburg, and submitted their report to Parliament, strongly denouncing the action of the police for allowing, and even aiding such an example of barbarism which has lowered Russia in the eyes of all civilized nations, and called forth such a storm of protest from England, France and Germany.

The report goes so far as to state that the massacre was engineered by the bureaucratic party, in order to divert the attention from their own aims to the doings of the Duma which the bureaucracy claims, as so-called representatives of the peasants, is responsible for the peasants' massacre of Jews.

It is even asserted in the report of the commission that the people did not generally take part in the massacre and pillage, but that the menials of Trepoff, the superintendent of Police at St. Petersburg, aided by Cossacks and drink-crazed soldiers were the real culprits.

The report has created a terrible sensation, and widened the breach between the Imperial Council and the Duma.

A grave crisis is now pending.

TO ASSASSINATE KING OSCAR.

San Francisco, June 22.
An anarchist plot has been discovered by the Paris police to assassinate Oscar King of Sweden during the coronation of King Haakon of Norway to-day.

A number of anarchists have been arrested here, and cable advices have been sent to the Norwegian and Swedish police warning them of the exposed plot.

SENATE VOTES FOR LOCK TYPE CANAL.

San Francisco, June 22.
Despite the fact that a majority of the board of consulting engineers submitted a report commending a sea level Canal across the Isthmus of Panama, the Senate to-day voted to adopt the minority report for a lock type Canal, which the Administration hoped for, as it will cost much less and take far less time to build than would be required for a sea level canal.

[It was thought that the San Francisco earthquake would be an important factor in determining the vote of the Senate in favor of a sea level canal, but evidently the minority report of the engineers has set at rest any fear from that source.]

The canal structures that would be most exposed to injury by the passing of an earthquake or violent movement of the earth surface are the locks as proposed by the minority, whose walls, many hundreds of feet, or even two or three thousand feet long at Gatun, would, at least some of them, be more than seventy-five feet high, and entirely unsupported on one side save for a part of the height by water. If these walls should be moved at all, the natural and probable result would be in their leaning, and so prevent the closing of the gates—an injury for which a suggestion of extra gates on hand would be useless, for no one could guess the extent of the movement.

But the most likely effect of such shock would be the fracture of these locks, in repairing of which many months or years might be required, and thus cause interruption of traffic or the abandonment of the canal.

An earth dam on an alluvial base, as proposed by the minority and which the senate has adopted may be fissured if the earthquake passed the locality, and if a crack in the dam or its base should open, the dam would go out, the lock drain and the canal be ruined.]

PACKING HOUSES HEAVILY FINED.

San Francisco, June 23.
The United States Government has started the ball rolling against the large packing houses, and pending the application of the new Bill reforming the methods for slaughtering, packing and inspection of meat, action was brought by the Interstate Commerce Commission against the following Chicago packing houses for gross violation of the Interstate Commerce law:—Swift & Co., Cudahy Packing Co., Armour & Co., and Nelson, Morris & Co., and they were each fined in the sum of $15,000 United States currency.

The Chicago and Burlington Railroad Company, as the common carrier of the product of the above mentioned packing houses, was also fined in the sum of $15,000.

President Roosevelt has taken a keen personal interest in the matter, and declares he will leave no stone unturned to put those responsible for the revolting state of affairs exposed in the meat packing business, behind prison bars.

TO PROSECUTE STANDARD OIL OFFICIALS.

San Francisco, June 23.
President Roosevelt held a special meeting of the Cabinet yesterday, when it was decided that the Attorney-general immediately take steps to prosecute the officials of the Standard Oil Company for receiving rebates and other unjust and illegal discriminations from the railroad, as shown in the report rendered by Commission Garfield.

[The cable despatch does not state whether civil or criminal proceedings are to be taken, but judging from late papers received from the United States, it would appear that criminal action is referred to.]

AMERICAN RAILROAD COMPANIES TO BE PROSECUTED.

San Francisco, June 25.
Interstate Commerce Commissioners Prouty and Clements have submitted a report to President Roosevelt charging nearly all the Western Railroad Companies with illegal actions in making rebates and discrimination in providing transportation.

The President has turned the report over to the Attorney-General, with instructions to prosecute, without mercy, all railroad companies involved.

BIALYSTOK MASSACRES REPEATED.

San Francisco, June 25.
Another scene of carnage has broken out at Bialystok. The unfortunate Jews who escaped the first onslaught of the infuriated, blood-crazed soldiery and citizens, by fleeing to the surrounding forests, and who returned to the city after the visit of the delegation from the Douma, being assured of protection, were sat upon, and a bloody carnage followed, men, women, and children being put to the sword.

NEW SPANISH TARIFF DENOUNCED BY FRANCE.

San Francisco, June 25.
The new Spanish tariff, which is now before the Cortes, is denounced by the French press, which demands that France retaliate.

RUSSIAN MOMENT OF REVENGE AT HAND.

San Francisco, June 26.
At a banquet held in St. Petersburg last night, at which several members of the ducal party and many prominent members of the nobility were present, General Rennenkamp, in responding to a toast on "the Russian army," said that the moment of Russia's revenge in the Far East was almost at hand, and that all preparations were being rapidly made to recover her lost prestige and territory.

His remarks were cheered to the echo by all present, and were clearly understood to be directed against Japan.

PROMINENT AMERICAN ARCHITECT KILLED.

San Francisco, June 27.
A shooting affair took place last night in New York, which has caused a great sensation in society circles.

Harry Shaw a prominent member of the "400," while dining at a roof-garden, deliberately drew a revolver and shot Stanford White, another member of the elite, killing him immediately.

When arrested, Shaw stated he was justified in the killing of White, who he alleged had insulted his (Shaw's) wife. He was arraigned this morning on the charge of murder, when his attorney pleaded insanity as the cause of the rash act.

[Stanford White was one of the most prominent architects in the country, and was the Chief Assistant of the celebrated architect Richardson who designed the famous Trinity Church of Boston; he designed Madison Square Garden, the University of New York, and many other well known buildings in New York city. He was a Fellow of the American Institute of Architects, and popular in New York, Boston and Washington society.]

SERIOUS FIRE ABOARD THE "AMERICA MARU."

San Francisco, June 28.

A serious fire broke out last night aboard the Toyo Kisen Kaisha steamer America Maru, at the dock here, and for a time it looked as if the vessel was doomed to destruction. The Harbour fire tugs responded quickly to the call for assistance, and several lines of hose were soon playing on the fierce flames which emitted from the bunkers, where the fire originated, and after a hard struggle for over an hour the flames were subdued. It is impossible at present to estimate the cost of the damage, which is considerable, but the sailing of the vessel for Japan will be delayed.

INTERNATIONAL POLICY-HOLDERS TO FIGHT AMERICAN INSURANCE COMPANIES.

San Francisco, June 28.

A committee of international policy holders in the New York Life and the Mutual Insurance Companies, have to-day signified their intention to fight said companies in the courts of the United States, for the refund of all monies illegally squandered by the directors. They state that they shall insist on a full accounting for a period covering the last twenty years, a representation on the board of finances, and a complete reorganization and correction of the corrupt and loose management of affairs as discovered in the recent Government inquiry.

(RECEIVED AT THE FOREIGN OFFICE.)

FLOODS IN CHINA.

Peking, June 21.

Owing to a flood in the Yellow River a part of the Lu-Han (Peking-Hankow) Railway has been wrecked, and has been impassable since the 15th instant. At present traffic is possible only on the Hankow-Hsushui and the Peking-Changtieli sections. The details are not yet known. The officials concerned say that the iron bridge over the Yellow River is safe. At all events it is expected that two weeks must elapse before the whole line is reopened to traffic.

"TOKYO ASAHI SHIMBUN.")

RUSSIA.

London, June 23.

There is high authority for stating that the reports with regard to negotiations proceeding for an Anglo-Russian agreement are unfounded. While the desire undoubtedly prevails on both sides for more friendly relations the present unstable condition of affairs in Russia renders any negotiations impossible.

News from St. Petersburg says that disaffection is steadily increasing.

RUSSIAN NEWS.

London, June 25.

Telegrams from St. Petersburg say that Cossacks attempted to massacre people at Bowl but were prevented by the soldiers.

Serious agrarian disturbances are reported from Yursk.

Newspapers are daily being confiscated in St. Petersburg.

RUSSIAN NEWS.

London, June 27.

In Vienna it is stated that the garrisons on the Austro-Russian and the Russo-German frontiers will shortly be reinforced. The cause of this movement is the situation in Russia.

St. Petersburg telegraphs that General Rennenkampf is convinced that a war of revenge against Japan is imminent.

The outlook on the lower Volga is alarming. The crops have failed, and the peasants are exasperated and are denouncing the Government.

RUSSIAN NEWS.

London, June 28.

The Ministry in St. Petersburg will ask the Duma for £7,900,000 to relieve the famine.

The peasants in Tula have struck for treble wages.

Disaffection in the Army is increasing.

EXPORTS.

RAW SILK.

Only a moderate business has been done during the week past; buyers both for the United States and Europe find the prices asked for Filature silk too high to be attractive.

Arrivals, which so far consist exclusively of Filatures, are on a larger scale than usual owing to the good quality of this season's cocoons which allows of more rapid reeling.

At the close market is weaker.

STOCK EXCHANGE.

A notable rise took place on June 27th in shares of the Tokyo Stock Exchange. Under Imperial Ordinance No. 74 which, was promulgated the same day, the liability reserve fund was abolished and the amount which was to be set off as a reserve is to be hereafter added to dividend. Government bonds were all weak. There was no notable enquiry for bank shares. The shares of the various cement companies advanced by ten yen on an average because the firms have received large orders from America.

WILD WITH ECZEMA

And Other Itching, Burning, Scaly Eruptions with Loss of Hair.

Speedy Cure Treatment.

Bathe the affected parts with Hot Water and Cuticura Soap, to cleanse the surface of crusts and scales, and soften the thickened cuticle. Dry, without hard rubbing, and apply Cuticura Ointment freely, to allay itching, irritation, and inflammation, and soothe and heal, and lastly take Cuticura Resolvent Pills, to cool and cleanse the blood. A single set is often sufficient to cure the most torturing, disfiguring, itching, burning, scaly, pimply humours, eczemas, rashes, irritations, and chafings, with loss of hair, when all else fails.

The agonizing itching and burning of the skin, as in eczema; the frightful scaling, as in psoriasis; the loss of hair and crusting of the scalp, as in scalded head; the facial disfigurement, as in pimples and ringworm; the awful suffering of infants and the anxiety of worn-out parents, as in milk crust, tetter, and salt rheum,—all demand a remedy of almost superhuman virtues to successfully cope with them. Such are the CUTICURA remedies, the purest, sweetest, most speedy and economical curatives for the skin, scalp, and blood ever compounded. Mothers are their warmest friends.

Millions of Women Use Cuticura Soap

Assisted by CUTICURA OINTMENT for preserving, purifying, and beautifying the skin, for cleansing the scalp of crusts, scales, and dandruff, and the stopping of falling hair, for softening, whitening, and soothing red, rough, and sore hands, for baby rashes and chafings, in the form of baths for annoying irritations and inflammations of women, or too free or offensive perspiration, in the form of washes for ulcerative weaknesses, and many sanative, antiseptic purposes which readily suggest themselves, as well as for all the purposes of the toilet, bath, and nursery.

CUTICURA RESOLVENT PILLS (Chocolate Coated) are a new, tasteless, odourless, economical substitute for the celebrated liquid CUTICURA RESOLVENT, as well as for all other blood purifiers and humour cures. Put up in screw-cap pocket vials, containing 60 doses.

CUTICURA REMEDIES are sold throughout the world. Australian Depot: H. Towns & Co., Sydney. British Depot: 27-28, Charterhouse St., London. French Depot: 5 Rue de la Paix, Paris. POTTS, DAVE AND CO., Ltd., Sole Agents, London, U. S. A.
